PERIL FROM FIRE

Statistics Show Feminine Garb is Source of Danger

"Safety first" may mean knickerbockers for women. On the other hand, it may merely mean asbestos skirts. Burns kill more women than men. Skirts are the reason. Don't you believe it? Then listen. Why is it that during the first three years of life more boys die of burns than girls, while with the fourth year the scale turns sharply?

Isn't it because the boys about the time they are 3 or 4 drop the garb of femininity and blossom out into their first first keen pants. Figures for the United States registration area covering a period of twenty-one years show that in the fourth year of life the relatively high death rate from burns among girls begins. After that the fatal skirts and the frilly waists which girls and women affect play their incendiary role, while the somber habitiments of masculinity protect their brothers from peril.

Burns, not fires in the sense of conflagrations or house and factory burnings, but just plain burns and scalds, are the only kind of accidents which number the majority of their victims among the weaker sex. Three out of every five deaths from burns are deaths of women and girls. If this happened for a single year it might be considered a mere matter of chance, but the mortality figures show that the ratio has continued constant over a long period.—[New York Sun.

Western Universities Benefit Through Donations

Seventy Millions Total Gifts in Last Year

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

EUGENE (Or.) May 31.—State universities of America have received more than $70,000,000 in gifts from private sources, according to information compiled by the University of Oregon. Returns from forty-three State institutions show gifts totalling $70,187,654, varying in size from a single gift of $2000 to the new Alaskan Agricultural College and School of Mines, to gifts totalling $25,000,000 received by the University of Michigan and $13,000,000 by the University of California. Michigan reports the largest single gift, a bequest of $18,000,000.

"An impressive feature of these returns is the large number of small gifts they show," said Prince L. Campbell, president of the University of Oregon. "Gifts of a few thousand, a few hundred dollars and less show that the citizen of moderate means is beginning to enjoy all the pleasures of philanthropy that were formerly the exclusive privilege of the very rich. The State university is a peculiarly appropriate beneficiary for these gifts, for it exists not to give education to the few but to every person who is qualified to profit by its advantages.

"The demands made upon State universities, especially in the rapidly growing Western States, are so heavy that it appears that legislative support will always lag behind actual needs. Like other State universities, Oregon has found a public gift campaign to be the only solution of its financial problem. Because we have determined not to 'wholesale' education, despite increasing numbers of students, our entire income is required for purposes of instruction and we have turned to the public for $5,000,000 to meet our building needs.

"A score of State universities have successfully conducted financial campaigns for buildings or endowment. So many have built stadiums that some educators have come to the conclusion that alumni will not subscribe money for anything else. Such is not the case. The alumni are interested in anything affecting the welfare of their university, if the need is really urgent. For example, University of Georgia alumni raised $1,200,000 for such prosaic items as a physics building, an animal husbandry building, a dormitory and endowment to raise professors' salaries."

FAIRBANKS WILL VISIT IN MOSCOW

Soviet Film Director to Ask Their Appearance in Russian Picture

[BY CABLE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

MOSCOW, May 31. — Douglas Fairbanks, Mary Pickford and Charlie Chaplin all are coming to soviet Russia this year to confirm with their own eyes reports of their extraordinary popularity in Bolshevia, according to Director Kossmann of the government film trust.

Kossmann, who has been in constant communication with "Doug" and "Mary" since their arrival in Europe, said he had received a letter from the latter saying she and her husband would be delighted to take in Moscow and Leningrad on their present trip.

Kossmann is leaving here in a few days to meet them in Stockholm and will try to interest them in appearing in a Russian film while they are in Russia, not for the financial return, but as sign of the interest they and Chaplin have taken in Russia's governmental experiment.

Chaplin, with whom Kossman also has been corresponding, is expected to visit Russia later. The three film stars will find the way paved for an enthusiastic welcome, as the films showing them and Jackie Coogan have caught on in Russia quite as much as in other European countries since the war.

Protest Made to Rumania on Oil Stock Grab

BY RAYMOND FENDRICK

[BY CABLE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

BUCHAREST, May 31.—Peter Jay, the American minister, has made a second sharp protest to the Rumanian government against the confiscation of the Standard Oil investments.

The American government contends that the new Rumanian mining law, which is sponsored by the Bratiano government, is confiscatory because it will force the Standard Oil Company and all other foreign oil companies to hand over 60 per cent of their stock to Rumanian interests at any price the latter may choose to pay. The Bratiano brothers, who are the dictators of Rumania, submitted a new bill to Parliament Thursday and asked immediate approval.

Prohibition Has No Terror for This Distiller

[BY CABLE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

LONDON, May 31.—Although the threat of prohibition is a very real worry to many Englishmen, it has no terror for at least one distiller. Far from being damaged if England should go dry—remote as that possibility is—he will become a very rich man.

"I insured against it when the threat first came," he recently confided to a friend. "For one thing, I have insured the income that I derive from drink to remain as long as it is today. They charge me only 2 per cent; so I have nothing to worry about."

FIGHT PLANNED ON WET PLANKS

Anti-Saloon League Arrays Convention Forces

Dr. Wheeler Sees No Chance for Liquor Advocates

Moist Sentiment Exists in Few Sections, He Says

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

WESTERVILLE (O.) May 31.—On the eve of the national conventions of the major political parties, Dr. Wayne B. Wheeler, legislative superintendent and general counsel of the Anti-Saloon League of America, has put forth at national headquarters here a statement to the effect that the league's campaign will be to defeat the placing of any wet plank in party platforms. He said the league would not insist that dry planks go into platforms, but would wage bitter warfare against any wet or modification declarations.

"The league, of course, will be absolutely against the nomination of any wet candidate for President or Vice-President, and against any platform declaration which attacks prohibition or favors modification of the Volstead Act. Of course, we do not believe that either political party will be so foolish as to nominate a wet candidate or to permit the adoption of a platform which contains a wet declaration.

SMITH NOT FEARED

"The candidacy of Al Smith of New York for President is not dangerous. The only real strength he would have would be in his own State and along the Atlantic seaboard. The Democratic dry South would never permit the nomination of a wet candidate for President. The Democrats in the Northwest, Southwest and Center of the United States take the same attitude as their southern brethren.

"Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, president of Columbia University, has been fulminating against prohibition very much of late. He was reliably quoted as favoring the writing of a wet plank into the Republican platform and as saying that it would take such a plank to save eleven States for the Republican party. Later on Dr. Butler denied that he had favored such a plank but did not retract anything he had said about prohibition, and still affirmed that prohibition cannot be enforced.

BUTLER DENOUNCED

"Of course such an attitude as that expressed by Dr. Butler is foolish and asinine and he stands practically alone among college executives and faculty members. Neither he nor Al Smith will get very far in influencing their respective parties. It so happens that both of them are from New York City, and there are some New Yorkers who cannot understand that there is a vast stretch of American territory west of the Hudson River. The utterances of these men are of the worst only symptomatic of a condition which exists among certain people and in certain quarters and is not at all widespread.

"The league campaign will be for the nomination and election of members of Congress and State Legislatures who are loyal to the Constitution and who stand for effective enforcement legislation. It is just as important now as at any other time in the history of this country to elect such men to office, and no man will have the approval of the dry forces of the United States who is not four-square for prohibition and its enforcement."

CARLSBAD CAVE GOES INTO FILM

World's Largest, Situated in New Mexico, Presents Problem in Lighting

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

CARLSBAD (N. M.) May 31.—Henry Otto, director, and several assistants of the William Fox Company, are spending considerable time in Carlsbad filming the interior of Carlsbad's underground cavern, the largest in the world, and until recently little known. The company has selected the cavern for a feature, which will be turned over to the educational department.

In discussing his plans, Otto stated that though he had either viewed or used in his picture work virtually all of the larger and more celebrated natural show places of the United States and foreign lands, he has never had the privilege of seeing such a gorgeous display as revealed by magnesium flares within the Carlsbad cavern.

In order to successfully film the contemplated feature, it will be necessary to bring two huge light generators mounted on trucks from the Hollywood studios, place them on the surface above the "big room" of the cavern, and convey the power through cables to the many chambers of the interior. It will also be necessary to provide easier access to the cavern, as at the present time it is made by means of a 200-foot drop in an iron bucket, operated by windlass and cable on the surface.

FIX WRECK BLAME

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

INDIANAPOLIS, May 31.—Indications that the Indiana Service Corporation will be held jointly responsible with Conductor Leonard Gushwa, and Motorman Frank Nolan, for the fatal wreck at Roanoke, Ind., a week go, were seen at the close of the Federal, State and local joint investigation which has been in session at Fort Wayne since the night of the crash which cost six lives when two cars struck head-on within a few hundred feet of the Roanoke station. The verdict will be made known in a few days.

LIQUOR FLOW STOPPED

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

TOMBSTONE (Ariz.) May 31.—Sheriff J. M. McDonald believes that the principal supply of corn liquor has been stopped in the capture by himself and Prohibition Agent Kent of two large stills that have been operated in the Dos Cabezos mountains, fifteen miles east of Willcox. Five of the operatives were taken while they were repairing their plant.

BANDIT RANSOM PRICE IS HEAVY

Chinese Outlaws Demand High Figure for McKay

Seattle Man is Fatally Wounded in Attack

Dr. Sun Protests Removal of Canton Arsenal

[BY CABLE AND ASSOCIATED PRESS]

PEKING, May 31.—Communication has been established with the bandits who kidnaped A. G. McKay, a native of Australia, the 16th inst., at Pichikow, 280 miles up the Minkiang River from Foochow, says a report from Foochow received today.

Jay Dinsmore of Seattle, was wounded fatally in an attack on Pichikow by bandits which preceded the capture and kidnaping of McKay. Paul Lee, a graduate of the Yale forestry school, and four other Chinese, also were kidnaped by the bandits, but no word of them was received in the Foochow advices, although the six had been of one party. All were employees of the China Import and Export Company.

The advices said McKay was being well treated and that the bandits were demanding a high ransom for him.

No word has been received here regarding Rex Ray and Dr. H. G. Miller, Americans, and two Britishers named Jaffray and Carne, captured by pirates who attacked their motor boat in Kwangi Province a week ago. The captives are supposed still to be in the pirates' mountain stronghold in that section.

DR. SUN PROTESTS

[BY CABLE AND ASSOCIATED PRESS]

CANTON, May 31.—American participation in the Chinese arms embargo agreement, was invoked today by the Canton or South China government, headed by Dr. Sun Yat Sen, as a bar to removal from Canton of arsenal machinery purchased from the United States nationals in 1921, but not yet fully paid for. Appeal against the removal was made to American consular authorities. The government says:

"There is now a Japanese steamer at Canton with an especially recruited gang of laborers from Manila who have begun preparations to load the plant for shipment to the north.

"As the United States is a party to the so-called arms embargo agreement it is an interesting question whether the removal of the plant from Canton and its resale to any other party in China would not constitute an American breach of the agreement in the view of the other signatories."

CHINATOWN RAID SEQUEL OF QUARREL

Police Action Follows Strict Orders to Put Lid on Gambling

A quarrel among Chinese as to the award of a $10,000 lottery prize yesterday resulted in the descent on the oriental quarter by members of police reserve squads and the issuance of strict orders banishing lottery and fan-tan from the district for all time. Rumors of imminent and serious trouble growing out of the quarrel over the prize led to action of police at Chief Vollmer's orders.

The trouble started Thursday when Officers Maxwell and Shubert of the vice squad raided the quarters of the New York Company, a Chinese concern at 444 North Los Angeles street, in search of liquor. The officers failed to uncover any liquor but they burst in upon a lottery game in full blast. In the confusion that followed the entry of the police the lottery drawing for a $10,000 prize is asserted by "Shorty" Foon, a Chinese, to have been illegally handled with the result that he has been deprived by the New York Company of the winning ticket.

There is little danger of a tong war, the police believe, because both Foon and officials of the New York Company are members of the same tong.

Sporadic attempts to stamp out gambling among the orientals in their section of the city have been made by the police before, and now every means at the disposal of Chief Vollmer will be used to end the practice for all time.

JAPAN PROTEST DELIVERED

Ambassador Hanihara Conveys Exclusion Note to Hughes; No Statements Issued

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE]

WASHINGTON, May 31.—Ambassador Hanihara, acting on instructions from his government, delivered today to Secretary Hughes the protest made by Tokio against the exclusion provision of the new Immigration Act.

The Ambassador called at the State Department shortly before noon and was received at once by Secretary Hughes. Neither he nor the Secretary, it was said, would have any statement to make.

Secretary Hughes and other administration officials concerned will begin immediately a study of the protest. This task is expected to require several days or more and pending its completion no formal announcement regarding the attitude of the Washington government will be forthcoming.

The same silence prevails at the Embassy. It is known, however, that Ambassador Hanihara has not been instructed by his government in the matter further than to deliver the protest to Secretary Hughes. With this step accomplished today it remains only for the diplomat to send the customary formal report to Tokio, announcing that his instructions have been carried out.

A report to the effect will be cabled to Tokio from Washington probably tonight and with it will go a brief account of the conference between the Ambassador and Secretary Hughes.

No plans have been made for publication of the protest, either by the Embassy or the State Department.

CITY TO GET TWO LARGE NEW PLANTS

Project at Harbor and Industrial Incubator to Cost $7,500,000

Two industrial projects involving the expenditure of $7,500,000 will shortly be listed among the new industries acquired by Los Angeles, according to Marius De Brabant, traffic manager of the Union Pacific Railway.

Mr. De Brabant has returned from the East recently where he was engaged in business connected with the new projects.

The first industrial plant is in the nature of a terminal company which proposes the construction of facilities to handle incoming and outgoing shipping at the harbor. Although the acquisition of this new project depends largely on what sort of dock and wharf facilities can be obtained at the harbor, it is beleived that this matter can be adjusted, he stated. The terminal plant will be built on the Union Pacific road's property at the harbor. The estimated cost is $5,000,000.

The second project is what is known as an industrial incubator. It will be constructed on Tract No. 1 in the Union Pacific Industrial Terminal in East Los Angeles. The business of the plant will be to furnish smaller industries with space, power and light in which to carry on their business. Bids on the construction of the plant are now out. At Mr. De Brabant's request, the names of the firms backing the two new plants are being withheld for the time being.

Huntington Park Hotel and Store to Cost $100,000

With the announcement yesterday that the William A. Bennett property at Florence avenue and Pacific Boulevard had been leased for ninety-nine years for an ultimate aggregate rental of $1,250,000, it was revealed that L. H. Sacket, Huntington Park manufacturer, who acquired the lease, will build a $100,000 store and hotel structure on the property.

The deals were disclosed by the Huntington Park realty firms of L. B. Crossan and James R. Johnston, who represented the Bennett interests. The property has a frontage of 210 feet on Florence avenue and 137 on Pacific Boulevard.

A two-story modern mission-style building will be erected, it was stated, with the capacity of the hotel being fixed at eighty rooms. Construction will be started within sixty days, it was predicted.

FAMOUS OLD EASTERN GIRLS' SCHOOL CLOSES

Announcement of the closing of the Veltin School for Girls in New York City after thirty-seven years of activity, at the close of the present school term, has been received in Los Angeles by many prominent women, graduates of the eastern institution. Among the graduates now living in Los Angeles are Mrs. David Clark Allison, Mrs. Walter D. Brian, Mrs. J. Walton Cook, Mrs. Chilton Devereaux, Mrs. Morris Flynn, Mrs. R. R. Hartley, Mrs. James Cox Savery, Mrs. Bertrand Stevens and Miss Georgia Wiseman. The school will close, it is announced, because the principals who have conducted its affairs since foundation, Mlle. Louise Veltin and Mrs. Charles Sprague, no longer feel capable of presiding and do not care to turn it over to others.

Special Cars on "Padre" to Join Coolidge California Special at Bay City

Southern California delegates ready to depart for the Republican National Convention, which opens at Cleveland the 10th inst., will leave Los Angeles Tuesday evening at 7:45 o'clock in special cars attached to the Southern Pacific "Padre.".

Sun Defeats Best Efforts of Rainmakers

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

TEHACHAPI, May 31.—Cummings Valley has defeated "Rainmaker" Charles Hatfield and the sun continues to shine despite his efforts during the last month, to produce moisture to total more than .21 of an inch under his contract which expires at midnight, tonight. The alleged rainmaker was after an inch over .21 of an inch up to a total of 1.21 inches.

On May 12 a trace of rain fell in the district and there is no indication of precipitation to aid Hatfield in filling his rain guages before midnight. The chances are so discouraging that Hatfield has already left the district.

After directing his "rain producing apparatus" at the sky for twenty-seven days with only a trace of rain as a result, Hatfield became thoroughly discouraged and claiming that "the atmosphere was so dry he had nothing to work on," he dismantled his tower and left the valley.

The total rainfall at Tehachapi during the 1923-24 season was 8.27 inches, compared to 7.95 inches during the 1922-23 period.

NEW POLICE OFFICERS

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

BAKERSFIELD, May 31.—Chief of Police Horace Dupes today announced the appointment of two new police officers and several changes to be made in his department. The new officers are Frank Spencer Wiley and Samuel Mishler, both well known here. They will rank as patrolmen. Elmer F. Hiney, night desk sergeant, will take the traffic officer's place made vacant by the resignation of Fred Payne, who has taken employment with the State Police.

WOMEN CHOOSE SAME OFFICERS

University Body Again Led by Mrs. Goodcell

Association Votes in Favor of World Court

Dinner and Addresses Are Last Day Events

With the exception of the corresponding secretary, all the officers of the State division were re-elected by unanimous vote at the convention of the American Association of University Women yesterday at the Friday Morning Club, 945 South Figueroa street.

Mrs. Georgia Kinney unanimously was elected as corresponding secretary to succeed Miss Anne M. Mumford, who declined the office.

The following officers will serve for the coming year: Mrs. Henry Goodcell, president, San Bernardino; Miss Mary Yost, vice-president, Stanford University; Mrs. Emery Ratcliffe, recording secretary, Fresno; Miss Jane Spalding, treasurer, Los Angeles, and Mrs. W. R. Ree, auditor, Saticoy.

REPORT IS MADE

The morning session was given to reports of officers, committees, revision of constitution and by-laws and other business, Mrs. Henry Goodcell, president, presiding.

Mrs. Frederick Faulkner, of San Francisco, who has just returned from the national convention at Washington, reported on the meeting there and of the efforts being made to raise funds to establish a national headquarters.

Other speakers of the morning session and luncheon were Mrs. Grace C. Stanley, State commissioner of elementary education, and Miss Amy Cryan of Mills College.

During the afternoon the following resolutions were adopted:

Appointing a special committee to study and aid the further development of a complete library service; indorsing the World Court for the preservation of peace; indorsing the proposed amendment to the Constitution on child labor; indorsing survey made by the Consumers' League on the minimum wage in California and indorsing the enforcement of the Volstead Act.

Lorado Taft, sculptor, of Chicago, who has been attending the Drama League at Pasadena, addressed the assembly on "Drama and Art in Community Life" and told his hearers of the work being done throughout the United States to develop creative expression.

Miss Ethel Richardson, Assistant State Superintendent of Education, followed with a talk on the workers' educational associations which are being developed in England. That education should not stop with the high school or university but should continue through adult life was the thought presented.

ELECT SUBJECT

"These groups—never more than thirty—elect a subject in which they are interested and pledge themselves to one evening a week for a period of three years," Miss Richardson explained. "This work is guided by some one of the university professors and is studied from the standpoint of the life experiences of the workers—cobblers, weavers, janitors—in fact, students are drawn from all lines of industry and labor. Subjects are not selected for their advantage from a vocational angle, but purely to develop the intellectual expression and enlarge the understanding of the individual."

A dinner at which Mrs. Susan M. Dorsey presided was held at the clubhouse at 6:30 o'clock. Dr. Walter F. Dexter, president of Whittier College, talked of college life; Dr. Aurelia H. Reinhardt, president of Mills College, discussed "The Woman's College."

The evening meeting closed the convention sessions.

END OF IRISH BORDER LINE CRISIS SEEN

Col. House at Meeting of MacDonald and Premiers to Arrange Parley

[BY CABLE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

LONDON, May 31.—The conference between Prime Minister MacDonald, William Cosgrove and Sir James Craig at Chequers this evening is believed to have effectively cleared the air of the Irish boundary problem and that ways have been paved for Mr. MacDonald to realize his desire of calling all the Irish in a conference to settle the matter once and for all in a manner agreeable to both sides.

It is understood that the meeting was very amicable. The fact that Col. E. M. House was present as a fourth party gave rise to rumors that he might be appointed as chairman of the boundary commission as provided for in the Anglo-Irish treaty. It was officially stated, however, that Col. House's presence at Chequers today was a pure coincidence and had nothing to do with the meeting of the Premiers. Col. E. M. House had been invited to visit Mr. MacDonald at Chequers many months ago.

Coast and Geodetic Survey
Tides, Los Angeles Harbor

Note—The following tabulation of the tides is compiled from the Pacific Coast Tide Tables of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey. The tides are arranged in the order of their occurrence, beginning with the first tide after midnight in the left-hand column. There are usually four tides, two high and two low, each day; but occasionally what would be the fourth tide occurs the next day. The columns of heights give the elevation of each tide above the plane of reference of the Coast Geodetic Survey chart soundings, except where the numbers are preceded by the minus sign, or dash, when heights are below the plane. The tabulations are furnished by the Field Station of the Survey, Customhouse, San Francisco, Cal.

Sunrise and sunset are computed for Los Angeles Harbor. Moonrise and moonset for Los Angeles.

PORT NOTES

Four hundred and sixty-two vessels of 1,250,000 tons arrived at Los Angeles Harbor during the month of May, just closed, while 490 departed during the same period, according to figures provided by the Marine Exchange of the Chamber of Commerce. While six less ships arrived in May than the previous month, the tonnage was 22,000 greater. There also was a noticeable increase in both the oil carriers and the passenger and freight vessels over the previous month, although twenty-five less lumber steamers arrived than the month before. Classified, the arrivals included 120 passenger and freight, 124 cargo, 119 tankers, 96 lumber and 3 miscellaneous.

Of these, 84 called from foreign ports, 118 sailed intercoastal lanes, 254 plied coastwise and eleven were non-contiguous coastwise.

Eleven nations were represented, America leading with 407 ships, British thirty-one, Mexican seven, Japanese and Norwegian four each; French, German and Dutch, two each and Spanish, Danish and Danzig one each.

Oil shipments during the month totaled 8,265,650 barrels, representing 5,501,953 crude, 1,963,803 fuel, 543,740 gasoline, 97,771 Deisel, 77,970 kerosene, and 81,283 distillate.

Lumber importations for May totaled 82,088,000 feet, including seventy ships with 64,113,000 feet of fir, and twenty-one ships with 17,975,000 feet of redwood. This brings the total lumber shipments to this port this year to 670,795,416 feet, brought here on 540 vessels.

The Grace Line freighter Rotarian, en route direct from Callao, Peru, to San Francisco, put into port here late yesterday afternoon to put off a member of her crew who was injured at sea. The vessel was met at the quarantine grounds by Dr. G. T. Van Voorhees, of the United States Public Health Service, and the man removed, the vessel continuing up coast.

W. B. Bannister, Southern California superintendent for the Admiral Line, claims the cargo handling record for this port. In five hours Friday, 1200 tons of cargo were discharged from and loaded into the liner H. F. Alexander, besides handling several hundreds of passengers and their luggage and thirty-five autos which they brought with them. The work would have been impossible, Mr. Bannister said, had it not been for the modern electric cargo gear with which the coast's fastest liner is equipped.

Maj. Robert H. Heterick, surgeon in charge of the United States Public Health Service at Los Angeles Harbor, and Mrs. Heterick will leave Thursday on a motor trip to the Yosemite for an extended vacation. In the absence of Dr. Heterick, Dr. G. T. Van Voorhees, also of the Health Service, will be in charge.

The Union Oil Company tank steamer Santa Maria changed her flags from British to American yesterday, following her arrival from South America. She will continue on the same run.

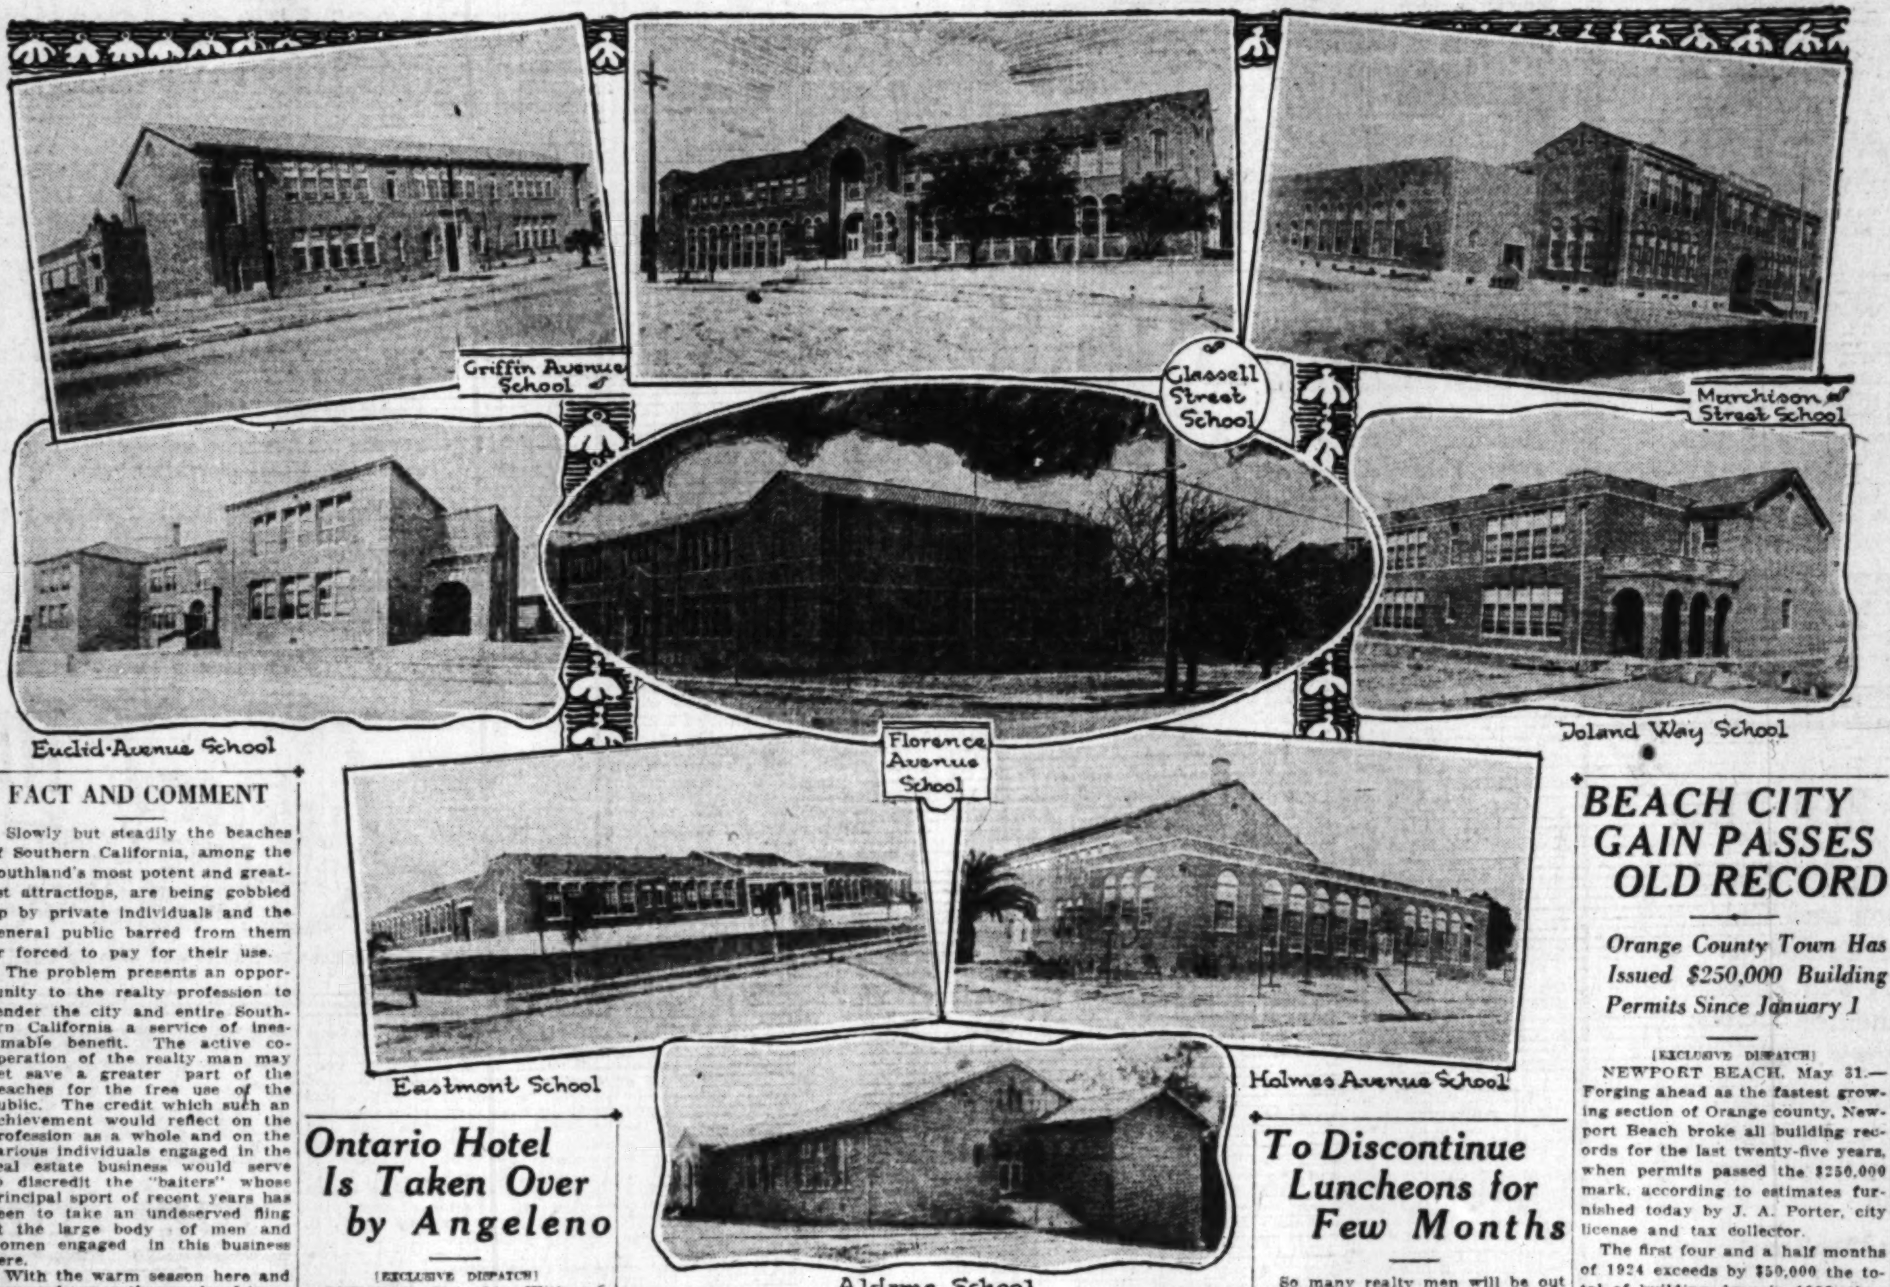
Part of City's Recent Building Developments in Extending Its School Facilities



Type of Structures Erected for Schools

FACT AND COMMENT

Slowly but steadily the beaches of Southern California, among the Southland's most potent and greatest attractions, are being gobbled up by private individuals and the general public barred from them or forced to pay for their use.

The problem presents an opportunity to the realty profession to render the city and entire Southern California a service of inestimable benefit. The active cooperation of the realty man may yet save a greater part of the beaches for the free use of the public. The credit which such an achievement would reflect on the profession as a whole and on the various individuals engaged in the real estate business would serve to discredit the "baiters" whose principal sport of recent years has been to take an undeserved fling at the large body of men and women engaged in this business here.

With the warm season here and thousands upon thousands of tourists trekking to the Southland the beaches this year will, in all probability, draw more persons than ever before. Year by year the ocean front is becoming more crowded. So far the public has grumbled a little but paid when forced to for the privilege of a refreshing dip in the ocean.

But as the city grows there will be less and less free beach land remaining and grasping owners no doubt will seek to obtain the utmost from the ocean frontage they control. The realty profession should interest itself in this matter. A plan for conserving the beaches for the public's use free of charge should be drafted and a movement started and fostered to have this plan adopted.

Broadcast It

The report made public by the Chamber of Commerce last week showing the growth of Los Angeles industrially during the first four months of the present year should be given wide circulation throughout the East to counteract asserted malicious and fictitious propaganda against the Southland.

¶ Four hundred new industries came to Los Angeles during the four-month period, according to the chamber report, breaking last year's record and indicating a

Ontario Hotel Is Taken Over by Angeleno

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

ONTARIO, May 31.—With papers in the transaction reported now in escrow, a deal is expected to be closed this week in which John Montgomery of Los Angeles purchases the Casa Blanca, Ontario's well-known tourist hotel, from W. W. Paden. The consideration is reported to be in the neighborhood of $125,000.

Mr. Montgomery is a former resident of Columbus, O., but has resided in Southern California for the past two or three years. He is making plans for extensive improvements to the hostelry, which will be conducted by his son and himself, it is said.

TERRA BELLA GARAGE PROPERTY IS SOLD

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

TERRA BELLA, May 31.—J. H. Leedham has taken over the T. Williams establishment known as Robert's Garage. Leedham will operate the place under the name of Leedham's Garage. His two sons will be associated with him. Leedham was in the automobile business for several years in Ohio and Pennsylvania, having held important positions both in the manufacturing and electrical end of the business.

MANY SCHOOLS COMPLETED

Attractive Units Added to Local Educational System During Last Twelve Months' Period

In her onward march of progress, Los Angeles has provided additional facilites to meet the unprecedented expansion of population, industry and other developments as best she could. During the last few years millions of dollars have been expended in the improvement of the local school system including new structures, equipment and other incidentals which have kept the Board of Education and its coworkers busily engaged.

In spite of the fact that many millions have been spent in new buildings, the consistent growth of population has proportionately increased the registration of students to such an extent that half-day sessions are now being conducted in many of the schools because of lack of space. The $34,640,000 school bond issue, to be voted upon this coming Tuesday, is a result of the need for finances to complete a needed development of the school facilities.

The types of construction used in the latest schools built by the city are of common brick manufactured in eighteen various plants in Southern California by the Brick Manufacturers' Association. The local brick industry promises to be one of the fastest growing in the West because of an increased demand for building products of this type, especially for the schools.

Among the latest additions to the list of brick schools is the Griffin-avenue school, Glassell-street school, Murchison-street school, Euclid-avenue school, Florence-avenue school, Toland Way school, Eastmont-street school, Holmes-avenue school and Aldama school.

Meline Company Is Banqueted by Santa Monicans

A rousing welcome of the Frank Meline Company organization into the Santa Monica Bay district, was tendered the local realty concern Wednesday evening, in the form of a banquet at the Santa Monica Athletic Club by the Santa Monica Bay District Realty Board.

Approximately 120 persons were present, including twenty-five members of the Meline company, the balance being Santa Monica realty men and guests of honor.

The Meline company has recently been appointed exclusive sales representatives for the Shoreham own-your-own apartment hotel to be erected at Santa Monica.

HALF OF MONTEBELLO TRACT CHANGES HANDS

The Lincoln Building Corporation has purchased the east half of the Marcotte tract on North Fourth street and will start active construction immediately on the first unit of eleven houses. This company has been operating in Boyle Heights but recognizes that Montebello is located in the center of the territory covered by the East Side organization which is so active in the rapid improvement of this locality.

NEW BANK BUILDING IS PROJECTED

San Diego Institution Plans $1,000,000 Ten-Story Structure

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

SAN DIEGO, May 31.—The San Diego Savings Bank, which recently acquired the property on the northwest corner of Sixth and Broadway in this city for a cash consideration of $600,000, will erect a modern ten-story bank and office building as soon as the lease of the occupants of the present property expires.

The site is occupied at present by a three-story brick structure, containing stores on the ground floor and offices on the second and third floors, and this building will be razed to make way for the new structure, which, when completed, will represent an investment of more than $1,000,000.

This transaction is one of the largest in several months, affecting the downtown business district, and with the erection of the new building, another substantial indication of the general expansion of the community will be seen.

During the past twelve months the appearance of Broadway from the water front to Sixth street has been materially improved with the erection of several fine buildings, representing expenditures of millions of dollars.

The general development of the community as a whole is well balanced by business blocks being improved, as well as thousands of new homes being constructed in all parts of the city.

LAND SALE ACTIVE IN IMPERIAL VALLEY

That the demand for Imperial Valley lands is constantly increasing is best evidenced by the fact that Gill, Sprouse & Beeman of the Citizens' National Bank Building, have completed several deals the past thirty days totaling 1430 acres in five separate ranches. One interesting fact is that a large number of inquiries came from other States—some as far east as New York and New Jersey. According to Gill, Sprouse & Beeman the demand for Imperial Valley lands is more than treble that of any time during the past four years. At the present time the cantaloupes are moving in the valley and it is estimated that not less than 15,000 cars will be shipped during the next few weeks.

To Discontinue Luncheons for Few Months

So many realty men will be out of the city on account of the hi-jinks and the Washington trip that it was decided at the last luncheon meeting to discontinue the Tuesday Los Angeles Realty Board luncheons until further notice. There will be at least forty realty men in Washington, many of whom will not return until the last of June or the first of July. They are representing the board at the seventeenth annual convention of the national association.

The Los Angeles Realty Board will be prominently represented at that convention. Mr. Tatum is vice-president of the national association. Mr. Brent is a member of the committee on resolutions and will present a paper before the industrial division. Mr. Hollingsworth is a member of the nominating committee. Mr. Janss is secretary of the farm-land division. Messrs. Culver, Case and Clogston all will present papers. Messrs. Ryan and McCourt lead discussions. Mr. Clogston has offered a prize for a special advertising contest. The secretary of this board is chairman of the committee on credentials.

Plans Laid for Office Edifice for Monrovia

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

MONROVIA, May 31.—Work on a two-story office and store building to cost $50,000 will be started this week at the corner of Myrtle and Lime avenues. The two frame buildings occupying the corner are being removed by W. L. Hanna, cleaner and tailor, who has bought them. Thomas Neville will then have builders start construction of the big office building. The Piggly Wiggly Company will occupy the ground floor on Myrtle avenue and there will be three smaller store rooms on Lime. There will be twenty-one office rooms on the second floor. The old buildings are being removed to 140 East Lemon avenue where they will be occupied by Hanna's cleaning shop and John Turner, tailor.

William Akin to Address Realty Class Thursday

William H. Akin will speak Thursday before the students in the class in general real estate, conducted under the auspices of the Los Angeles Realty Board by the extension division of the University of Southern California.

Mr. Akin was chairman of the committee which had in charge the promotion of the present real estate legislation, and he will give many sidelights to the students on the steps leading up to the present act and its amendments.

BEACH CITY GAIN PASSES OLD RECORD

Orange County Town Has Issued $250,000 Building Permits Since January 1

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

NEWPORT BEACH, May 31.—Forging ahead as the fastest growing section of Orange county, Newport Beach broke all building records for the last twenty-five years, when permits passed the $250,000 mark, according to estimates furnished today by J. A. Porter, city license and tax collector.

The first four and a half months of 1924 exceeds by $50,000 the total of building done in 1923, then the banner year for this locality, while the first twenty days of May, totaling $40,000 in permits issued, has broken every record for any previous May in the city's history.

More than 125 new buildings have been erected or are under way in Newport Beach, starting from January 1. Last year more than 300 new structures were put up, and while it is believed this number will be equaled this year, the outstanding feature of the new buildings erected this year is that they are of better construction and much larger.

While figures are not available for Costa Mesa, the area outside the city limits of Newport Beach, but a part of the Orange county harbor district, it is known that new houses are going up in almost as large a volume as in the incorporated section. Estimates furnished by lumber and material dealers show that about seventy-five houses at a cost of $80,000 have been built on the Mesa since the first of this year, while building for 1923 in that section amounted to about $200,000.

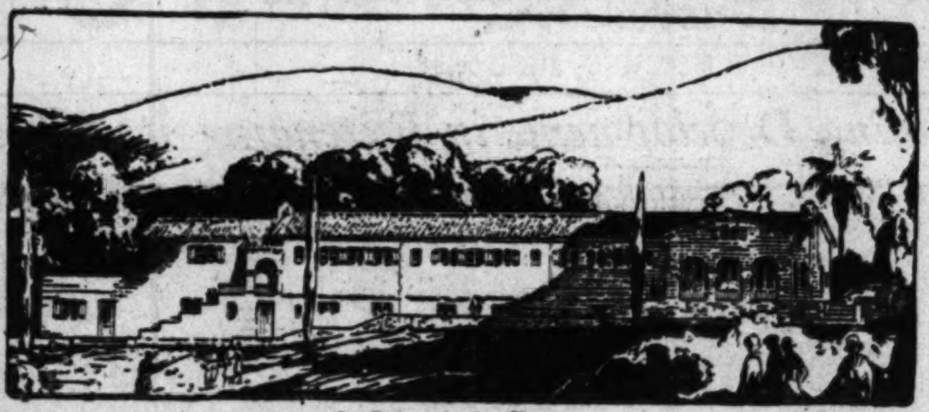
Large Golf Clubhouse Soon to Be Completed



On Palos Verdes Estates

GOLF LINKS CLUBHOUSE WORK BEGUN

Beautiful Structure on Palos Verdes Estates to be Finished in August

Work is in progress on the erection of the $60,000 golf clubhouse for the Palos Verdes Estates on the eighteen-hole golf course just east of Malaga Cove. Members of the Palos Verdes art jury, including Myron Hunt, David Allison and Robert Farquahr, collaborated on the design of the clubhouse, which is of Spanish architecture, and which occupies a commanding site on the Via Campesino.

Preparation of the links has been in active progress for some months under the direction of William Bell, widely known golf architect, designer of the Ojai Valley Country Club, the Mountain Meadows and other fine Southern California courses. Grass on all the fairways, greens and tees is in excellent shape, and it is planned to have the course ready for play by July 1 next, while the completion of the clubhouse is set for not more than thirty days later.

Few Southern California golf courses are located as close to the ocean as the new Palos Verdes links, and it is said to resemble in many respects the famous Del Monte courses, which are ideal for summer play.

FORM CORPORATION

Negotiations for the organization of the Aregood Apartment Building Corporation have been completed, it was announced yesterday by F. S. Aregood, president and general manager. The company, with a capital stock of $500,000, will offer securities to the investing public and will allow the investor to participate in the profits that accrue in the future expansion and development of the firm. William H. Brown and Ernest K. Hartman are the other officers.

OPEN COFFEE STORES

The Golden Lion Restaurant Company, headed by Louis O. Davidson and Julius O. Davidson, has taken a ten-year lease on property at 631 South Spring street, where they will open the first of a chain of coffee shops to be established in this city.

Subdivisions and Subdividers

Formal opening of the Riviera community development will take place today, it was announced by officials of the John A. Vaughn Corporation, which is handling the project in connection with the new Los Angeles Athletic Club's country home.

It is the purpose of those who are offering this property to make the area, bearing the name of Riviera, with all the attributes of its namesake, synonymous with all that the name implies. As the European Riviera expresses the last work in all that is beautiful, so will the Los Angeles Riviera be an exemplification of high ideals in architecture, landscaping and an exclusive home environment. The Riviera will be limited to approximately 250 estates, covering an area of 440 acres of mesa land, two miles in length and averaging one-half mile in width. Adjoining the Palisades of Santa Monica on the west, it has an immediate elevation of 300 feet, affording an outlook of splendor and beauty. Its eastern boundaries merge into and become a part of the Beverly Hills District. Cognizance has been taken of the growing appreciation of the importance and value of preliminary beautification, prepared by competent architects and landscape engineers. In laying out the Riviera as a community, the importance of this work can hardly be exaggerated. By securing the services of Mark Daniels, landscape architect and engineer of national reputation, having served under Franklin K. Lane as assistant to the Secretary of the Interior and Superintendent of the National Parks, the preliminary and general planning has been placed in most capable hands.

To Auction Lots

Barry & Austin, national real estate auctioneers of San Francisco, formerly of New York, have been engaged by the W. H. Rees Company, to sell a limited number of business and residence lots in Allwyn Park at the corner of Ventura Boulevard and Sherman Way. The sale is to be held on the property under a large tent next Sunday afternoon, June 8. In discussing the auction sale Mr. Barry explained that their contract with the owners provides that every lot put up will be sold regardless of price, and they will sell, if only one bid is made. Four years ago this firm conducted a number of sales in and around Los Angeles, among them Chesterfield Square, and Huntington Beach when lots sold at the auction at a few hundred dollars each, which, after oil was brought in by the Standard Oil Company, sold for thousands each, one lot buyer securing $22,500 for a lot which cost him less than $500.

To Build Cabins

Immediate construction of thirty-five mountain cabins will start at once at Girard to care for the increasing demand, according to Victor Girard, community builder. Construction on four of these cabins will start tomorrow. The entire program of construction will start as soon as material can be assembled on the ground. The new cabins will be located in the foothills of the Santa Monica Mountains, within close proximity of the new golf course which is now under construction. The location of the cabins is particularly desirable because of the splendid view. Each cabin will be of a unique design, with a large living room, sleeping porch, bath and screen porch. The arrangements for the cabins are so designed as to reduce the household duties to a minimum.

Reports Big Sales

Although the tract has been open but six weeks, and development work has been given more attention than sales up until the last week, more than 285 lots have been sold, totaling $400,000 worth of property, in Toluca Lake Park, according to Ivor McCray, junior member of the firm of Heffron-McCray-St. John, subdividers of the property. Improvement work is already well under way. Many of the winding drives have been laid out and graded and will shortly be ready for surfacing. Poles for electric light, power mains, cement sidewalks and curbs will be rushed, says Mr. McCray. "The wires will be strung immediately so that electricity will be available while water mains are being installed so that purchasers who wish to build can get materials on the ground. All our plans have been laid out and are being successfully consummated to make Toluca Lake Park, which lies directly north of Universal City, for people with discriminating taste. We have restricted building in such a way that, while a person can build a home that he can afford, the value of his investment will be enhanced rather than depreciated by the houses surrounding him."

Has All Features

It is seldom that one finds the rare combination of beauty and outdoor acivity combined with present-day metropolitan conveniences and standard improvements in a residential community. According to S. H. Woodruff of Hollywoodland the development of which he has directed contains not only the accepted improvements, such as concrete drives, sewers, aqueduct water, gas, electric lights and ornamental street lighting, but it has all of the advantages of a mountain recreational center. "The Hollywoodland Riding Club," said he, "has been formed, so that those who live in Hollywoodland may avail themselves of the horseback riding over the trails and in Griffith Park. We are also planning a community center with swimming pools, children's wading pools, community house, tennis courts and a pony golf course.

Problem Acute

"Delinquency among children is one of the serious problems of our time," states G. W. Cochrane, resident agent for Norco Farms. "This problem is acute in the cities and is not confined to any class, as the children of rich and poor alike are involved. We are startled by reports of our police department that a very large percentage of crimes are committed by adolescent children. I am of the opinion that there will be a continuing increase in delinquency among children as new means of excitement are developed and as concentration of population makes the normal and natural activities for children more difficult. It is vastly more important that children should be given an opportunity to grow up in an environment more natural and favorable for their development. Living in the country the adolescent boy or girl is removed from the artificial stimulation of the city.

Transfer Acreage

Yesterday the issuance of a certificate of title by the Union Title Insurance Company of San Diego, transferring 1200 acres of the Jamul Rancho from R. E. Harrison to the Minnewawa Ranch Club, creates in San Diego county, America's largest country club. Contracts have been made for the additional purchase, through the same interests, of 6800 acres of Jamul Rancho and 2000 acres comprising the Aubrey Sears property. The 10,000 acres, all of which is already contracted for purchase, marks the largest individual sale of local real estate for many years. The tract, which is a unit, comprises an area of more than fifteen square miles, lying along the eastern shores of Otay Lake to the old historic Campo road. While the consideration is reported as $60,000 for the 1200 acres and $500,000 for the entire 10,000 acres of the ranch, a report of the San Diego Realty Board certifies that this sum is conservative. In its report the board stated that it believes the potential value of the properties to be far in excess of $453,120.

Open New Tract

Announcement has been made by Bundy & Albright that their new development in the foothills of Cahuenga Park, close to the Mulholland and Scenic Drive, will be formally opened to the public on the 15th inst. with a musical program and schedule of sports and games. This new project known as Hollywilds is unique in many ways, it being the closest in of foothill lodgesite offerings and though it is only eight miles from Hollywood, one has the feeling of being a hundred miles from the bustle of the city, so attractive is the natural beauty of the wooded canyons. "Hollywilds is a part of Stone Canyon and is reached either over South Sherman Way and Valley Vista Terrace Drive, or by way of Kester avenue from Ventura Boulevard through Cahuenga Park," says C. C. Albright.

Continual Sales

Continual sales of Runnymede half acres and full acres these days, when sales in subdivisions and of business property have not been overactive, at least the drift of sentiment among medium class buyers toward little garden homes and poultry ranches. The Runnymede Poultry and Berry Development Company has a flourishing colony of about 600 acres comprising 250 colonists and about 1200 persons on Ventura Boulevard and Reseda avenue. The wage earner bowed down with the responsibilities of life feels that when laid off disaster faces him, as his modest stipend stops when he stops work, and whose nervous anxiety indicates his lack of resources and the fear he feels of impending loss of position, is turning his thoughts toward having a little land on which he can have a home of his own and live with his family in the great open spaces. This class of people being drawn toward Runnymede Colony as never before, according to W. C. Daniel, manager.

Form Organization

Lot owners of City Terrace have organized into a body to be called City Terrace Civic Association. The purpose of the society is to promote the welfare of the subdivision by holding the company to its promised improvements and, if possible, to establish a park within the boundaries of the tract. At a recent meeting members elected their officers. They are: President, Dr. H. Harrison; vice-president, H. Zagon; secretary, B. Eisenstadt, and treasurer, Mr. Herron.

Avocado Land Sales Active

Edwin G. Hart, president of the La Habra Heights Company, owners of La Habra Heights near Whittier, states that this property was recently opened to the public again. During the hoof-and-mouth disease the entire ranch was closed to assist in every way the stamping out of the disease, although there were no cattle on the place. During the short time that the property has been opened, sales have been brought to normal. This shows that the market for proven avocado lands is active. Recent sales reported are to George E. Virden, eight acres; Louise M. Hamilton, three acres; M. A. Mason, four acres; Fred Sperry, six acres; M. E. MacLin, seven acres, and Mr. Cosgrove, one acre. The majority of these purchasers have stated their intention to contract with the La Habra Heights Company to plant their places to avocados and to give the property expert care.

DELICATESSEN FIRM ASSURED NEW HOME

NEGOTIATIONS COMPLETED FOR ERECTION OF BRICK STRUCTURE

The J. W. Lewis Company announces completion of negotiations for the erection of a brick building at 780-782 Ceres avenue, which will be occupied by Rabin Brothers, Incorporated. The property is owned and the building will be erected by Harold C. Dewey and A. M. Lichty of Pomona. S. G. Ries of the Lewis company's San Pedro-street branch office represented all parties in negotiating the lease.

Rabin Brothers, Incorporated, are public-market operators in various parts of the city, and the new building will be used as a central warehouse and kitchen for the manufacture and distribution of delicatessen commodities for their chain of retail stores. This company also conducts a direct import business in Swedish food products which are shipped from Sweden to Los Angeles Harbor.

Quick Profits from fruit and poultry

Full-bearing groves in great sacrifice sale

IF you are merely a prospective land owner, seeking a few acres in the country where you can have a dependable life-income from fruit and poultry, or if you are an orchardist, in the market for a citrus grove at a price which will insure maximum returns on your investment, then here is your life-time opportunity to obtain a scientifically cultivated, full-bearing grove of oranges, lemons, grapefruit or walnuts, of five acres or more at the price of raw land.

This amazing offer, which is without precedent or parallel, is the result of an order from the controlling interests in England to liquidate immediately the magnificent estate of the Arlington Heights Fruit Company, comprising upwards of three thousand acres within the city limits of historic Riverside, California.

An abundance of fine water, forty miles of landscaped driveways, the proximity of excellent schools, stores, churches, country clubs, and the most beautiful surroundings imaginable, all combine to make this an opportunity wholly beyond comparison.

The full-bearing groves purchased at the present amazingly low prices of $500 to $900 per acre, insure excellent returns from the fruit alone; and if this income be supplemented with profits from poultry raising—for which the soil, climate, water, and marketing conditions are especially favorable—then indeed will the purchaser have a highly profitable investment as well as a delightful home-site. Expert assistance in the operation of the groves will be obtainable at small cost.

More than a million dollars' worth of this wonderful property has already been sold, so don't wait and wonder. Investigate while the opportunity is open. Use the telephone, or fill in, tear out, and mail the coupon today.

VARIOUS TYPES OF CUSTOMERS

Architect Has Many Kinds of Clients to Satisfy

Today's Small House Plan of Good Architecture

Outdoor Idea Predominates in Residence Design

BY HAROLD O. SEXSMITH

There are two types of clients who come to architects for professional advice and service. The first type are those who come with a firmly set jaw and a crystallized idea of exactly what they want, all set down on paper. The other type are those who come with some vague notion of their desires and are open to conviction, and really believe that an architect can help them with their problem.

Of course, there are all degrees of clients in between these two extremes. The first kind are always the most exciting and often stir the ingenuity and diplomacy of the designer to his best efforts. When the house is completed for such a client, if they are still on speaking terms, both have passed through an educational process that would be hard to duplicate. The architect has learned a lot about human nature and the client has learned much about architecture. Such a client nine times out of ten is proud of his house and boasts about his architect.

SELECTS WITH CARE

The second variety of client is the one whose case is a happy one, indeed. He chooses his architect carefully and then assumes the same attitude toward him that he would toward a good physician or a good lawyer. He enjoys the building adventure and he is generally surprised and pleased at the result which has grown from the somewhat chimerical idea he had sown in the architect's mind.

The building of a small house is always an interesting problem for any architect true to the name. It means that he must dip into the family routine of his client and by more or less intimate personal contact, find out what his real needs are. A house is never really a successful solution unless it just meets and does not exceed these needs. Architects are sometimes, in their enthusiasm for their art, inclined to subordinate a client's needs for purely aesthetic considerations.

Here is an illustration. A very well-known Los Angeles architect was in conference with a client about to build. The client was a wealthy man but nevertheless had very sensible ideas about what constituted a livable friendly house. They had reviewed the requirements of the family carefully and as the conference ended, the client smilingly remarked, "Just remember this, young man, you are building a house for me and not a monument for yourself." The keynote of the ideal that all true architects have in every effort to serve is tied up in that remark.

IMPROVE DESIGNS

It is because of this desire to serve and to improve the general appreciation of good architecture that the accompanying plans are published from week to week in The Times. Today's plan is a further example of the new type of small house architecture which is being developed in Southern California. It meets all the special requirements of our climatic conditions and is in perfect harmony with our architectural traditions although not in any sense a slavish copy of it. Every feature of the house speaks of a kindly climate where outdoor life is predominant.

An interesting feature of this plan is that if desired, one bedroom and sleeping porch could be omitted from the plan without changing the fundamental arrangement. These could be added later with very little inconvenience in the remainder of the house.

The floors are placed low to the ground giving the house an intimate character. It is not stilted but seems to grow up out of the garden as if it had always belonged there. The hand of a real artist has been at work to create this effect that only comes with the softening of time.

Plans for this house were prepared for the Small House Service Bureau under the auspices of the Architectural Club of Los Angeles. This bureau is located in the Metropolitan Exhibit of Building Materials in the Metropolitan Building, where sketches are on exhibit. L. H. Lippiatt is the designer.

SAN DIEGO PARK SITE PURCHASED

Large Acreage Acquired by Peoples Company for Recreation Center

Announcement was received today that one of the largest real estate deals made in recent months in San Diego was completed last week when the G. Ivan Peoples Company bought 115 acres of choice land just outside the southern limits of San Diego. The land was purchased from R. C. Allen and associates for a cash consideration of $70,000 according to reports.

Inquiry at the Los Angeles office of the G. Ivan Peoples Company revealed the fact that the land is to be developed as a modern memorial park to be known as Glen-Abbey Memorial Park and that a map of the park is to be filed for approval of the County Supervisors of San Diego this week.

Improvements of the land already have been started, it was stated, and it is thought that a portion of the park will be ready for public use within thirty days. In order to hasten the improvements G. Ivan Peoples is now in San Diego personally supervising the work of engineers, landscape architects and contractors.

Builders' Questions Answered

By Southern California Chapter, Associated General Contractors of America

[With the view of rendering assistance to prospective builders and for the purpose of giving sound advice on problems arising in connection with building projects, The Times has instituted this department, which will be conducted as a weekly feature. All questions should be sent to the Real Estate and Building Department, Los Angeles Times.]

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF ACCOUNT

Question: I am building a house and wish to know what constitutes a request for a statement of account.

Answer: The lien-law statute says, "written demand of owner."

LIABILITY FOR LABORER'S WAGES

Q.: I have just completed a house and am confronted by a rather unusual problem. In arranging for the plumbing installations I let the contract for same to an incorporated plumbing firm, who assigned a plumber from their shop to do the work. When he finished all there was to do he received his wages by check from the plumbing establishment for which he was working, advising me at the same time that he had been paid. The check, however, was found to be worthless, and when the plumber went back to the firm that had sent him to my house he found it had discontinued business. The plumber now wants to collect his wages from me and I want to know if I am liable and what redress I have.

A.: If the plumber gave to either you or the concern which engaged him to do the work in your house a receipt for the wages paid him by check you are not responsible and he would have no grounds upon which to institute a lien. If, on the other hand, he did not, then you are responsible and the plumber has the right to file a lien and it would be lawful and hold.

PREPARATION OF CONTRACT

Q.: Please let me know how I shall make up the papers with the contractor for my house, and also how I can get a clear title on my lot in a short time.

A.: (a) you should have a real plan of the house, showing arrangement of the rooms and their dimensions, also a set of specifications that show just exactly what kind of work the contractor is going to do for you on every part of the job. If the house has been planned by an able architect you will not need to bother with these things, as the architect provides them. If you try to do without them you put yourself entirely in the hands of the contractor and trust to luck and his personal integrity for the results you desire. Under the best plans and specifications there are so many possibilities for misunderstanding that the owner should take all reasonable precautions to protect his interest throughout the work. There is a short form of contract that is ordinarily used on residential work which may be bought for a few cents at any of the large stationers. This contract form should be filled in carefully and signed in duplicate by both parties. There is a place for filling in a bond to laborers and material men and the contractor often waives this as unimportant. When only a personal bond is furnished it is hardly worth the trouble, as it is usually worthless, but when the contractor furnishes a surety bond from a responsible surety-bond company you have the best protection against loss on the contract. (b) Any established title company will search your title without unnnecesary delay. If they do not do it quickly it is probably time well spent to await their decision.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION

Q.: A workman in the employ of a subcontractor was injured recently on my building. Can I be held liable for his compensation?

A.: The original Compensation Act provided that a workman in a case of this kind could collect from his employer, and if the subcontractor was not insured and unable to meet the claim the general contractor was held liable for same. If the general contractor was for any reason unable to settle the claim it then became a lien against the property. This has been changed by a recent legal decision, however, so that the claim cannot now be held against the owner.

NOTICE OF COMPLETION FOR REPAIR JOB

Q.: If material is furnished for a repair job is notice of completion required?

A.: Ordinarily, no. If the job is a very large contract alteration job there might be a notice of completion filed.

ESTIMATING COSTS, ETC.

Q.: (a) Will you please send me a copy of "Average Unit Building Costs," pamphlet referred to in last week's Builders' Questions Answered? (b) Also would like to know if, in estimating the cost of a house, contractors use the extreme dimensions or actual number of square feet. (c) Can you give me the lien-law requirements to avoid having to pay a second time where the contractor fails to pay the bills on a house?

A.: (a) we are sending you the pamphlet you wish. (b) In estimating the cost of any structure it is customary for contractors to figure the total square-foot area, including porches and stoops. (c) If your contractor failed to furnish a surety bond and you did not require receipted material and labor bills from him you have no redress whatever.

WIDER STREETS BADLY NEEDED

Vermont-Beverly Board Head Urges Prompt Action

Costs Increase With Delay, Wheeler Declares

Petition for 100-Foot Avenue Filed With City Body

BY ROYALL W. WHEELER
President Vermont-Beverly Association

A very appropriate slogan for Greater Los Angeles right now is: "The Second Million Population is Coming to Los Angeles—Let Us be Prepared to Meet it."

Royall W. Wheeler

Our preparations for the vast thousands of ever increasing citizens of Los Angeles include many things, but one of the most vital is that of traffic relief, together with the proper distribution of our community — urban and suburban business centers.

Naturally, the complaint of congestion and need for traffic relief, is not centered altogether in any one district or the downtown metropolitan center—this city and county have grown so fast, that practically all our through arteries during the rush hours are overburdened with traffic.

We need more of our streets paved—but above all, we need wider streets. All through arteries should be a minimum width of eighty feet, regardless of whether purely residential or otherwise. The sixty-foot street in a strictly one-family residential district is adequate, but in practically all other districts a wider street is desirable. When a street has become an "out and out thoroughfare"—and by that we mean an artery that carries a major volume of traffic—whether it is community, local or through traffic—such a street must be, if possible, made wide enough to meet all the practical and reasonable demands for its use from the standpoint of the city at large and for its specific use by the immediate community tributary to it.

CAN BE TOO WIDE

A strictly business street should not be too wide because of the breaking the contact of the so-called back and forth and across the street trading intercourse, but at the same time, it must be wide enough to take care of the streetcar traffic, the motor-bus traffic, the local trading autos and still have room for at least two lanes for the through traffic. The ideal width for a "well-balanced business street" is 100 feet as the merchants and business interests of the street as well as the trading public are to be considered.

It is of prime importance in the making of a real business street that the public find it to be accessible. A business artery so congested that the motorist shoppers cannot get in and out of it, without being tied up in a string of slow-moving machines will retrograde; business will seek the more accessible streets.

In Los Angeles, due to the fact that the per capita use of the automobile runs probably greater than in any other city in the Union, and the favorable climatic conditions, we find that we have a unique situation in this city. Everybody wants to feel free to move everywhere and move at any and all times—on four wheels—and especially when shopping—and so we must have more room to navigate.

We must widen our narrow streets and see to it that all future arteries are made wide before the county or city accepts them for dedication.

EARLY ACTION URGED

In view of the great need to widen many of Los Angeles' most prominent streets, the time to widen a major artery of traffic is before such a widening project will become financially prohibitive.

The Vermont-Beverly Association insists that such is the case in connection with the upper highway of Vermont avenue. The association filed this week with the Board of Public Works a majority petition asking that this avenue be widened from eighty feet to a uniform width of 100 feet from Wilshire Boulevard to Hollywood Boulevard, taking ten feet off of each side of the street. The association has been conducting a campaign for more than a month on the enterprise. The frontage along Vermont from Wilshire to Hollywood Boulevard is not densely built up. Less than 10 per cent of the entire distance will be affected so far as buildings are concerned, and this means that this artery can be widened at a minimum of low cost with a maximum of benefit.

It has been the history throughout this city that wherever a street has been widened—splendid development follows—and invariably property values have climbed.

RAISES VALUES

Wide thoroughfares make for substantial, permanent construction and attract better and larger buildings. In addition to an increase in property values far in excess uncertain and prospective front foot values that obtain, become thoroughly stabilized following the widening of a major artery and business street.

The widening of Vermont from Wilshire Boulevard to Hollywood Boulevard will represent, when accomplished, the first major traffic artery to the west from Figueroa, that is 100 feet wide and as such will be a great factor in the distribution of the prevailing northwest and southeast crosswise traffic for the accessible east and west arteries such as Wilshire, Sixth, First, Beverly, Melrose, Santa Monica, Sunset and Hollywood Boulevard.

It must be borne in mind by property owners and the people in general that while it takes three to five years to widen the street by the usual condemnation proceedings, that such widening enterprises, even though apparently premature at the time they are initiated, are usually found to be of untold benefit when actually realized and utilized because of the natural business progress that takes Place in a three to five-year period.

highly satisfactory condition. Bank clearings for the same period showed a substantial increase over the first four months of 1923.

In addition to this W. H. Harrison, general manager of the Los Angeles Investment Company, declared last week that more homes are being bought in Los Angeles than ever before and that despite asserted rumors in the East that home owners here are being forced out of their homes because of inability to meet their payments. His company and a majority of the larger mortgage companies in the city have not had a single foreclosure this year.

With reports of this kind being issued regularly it is difficult to ascertain on what basis the asserted eastern rumors are being founded. They are, however, doubtless going the rounds to the detriment of Southern California and the Chamber of Commerce and other civic and municipal organizations should broadcast the truth to every section of the United States and Canada.

The Small-Home Plan

The plan put into effect at a local subdivision of building and furnishing of a home to sell complete, should engage the attention of other Los Angeles subdividers.

It is a fact that houses are selling here at present much more readily than subdivision lots. There is a dearth of some lot buyers and a wealth of small-home buyers.

At this tract eleven small homes were built and furnished completely. Although they have just been finished, nearly all of them have been sold and will be transferred to their buyers at the close of a small-home exposition now being conducted.

The average man of moderate or small means who contemplates a home of his own and who knows little or nothing of building is a ready prospect for a new house, newly furnished.

He avoids the delay necessary to the construction of a house and the many pitfalls into which the uninitiated often falls when he buys a lot and goes about the business of having an abode built for himself and family.

The idea is a good one from the standpoint both of the subdividers and the prospective home owner. It stimulates the sale of lots for the one and provides a home for the other at small cost and no inconvenience.

BETTER BEACH HIGHWAY PLAN

Improvement Association Announces Plans

Program Calls for Spending of $2,500,000

Boulevard Now Busiest of State Thoroughfares

By actual count 22,000 automobile traversed the highway at Willowville Crossing in a twelve-hour period.

Announcement has been made by the Long Beach Boulevard Improvement Association of plans to widen the present highway to 100 feet its full length with seventy feet of paving from curb to curb. The program contemplates improvements the total cost of which will exceed $2,500,000. This, coming on top of the recent voting of $5,000,000 worth of harbor bonds by Long Beach and $35,000,000 worth of flood control bonds by the county, is held indicative that the transportation facilities to the harbor are not to be behind the other major improvements which are making the harbor district of vital importance to all Southern California.

From a cowpath of twenty years ago to the most extensively traveled highway in California is the history of the twenty miles of thoroughfare that connects Los Angeles with Long Beach by way of Vernon, Huntington Park, Walnut Park, South Gate, Home Gardens, Lynwood, Compton, Virginia City and many other growing communities.

The plans of the Long Beach Boulevard Improvement Association call for an ornate concrete bridge across the flood-control channel and for electroliers at the curb line the full length of the highway which are intended to make the night as light as day for those who traverse the new boulevard.

The Long Beach Boulevard Improvement Association will shortly establish headquarters in a new office building of its own on the boulevard in Lynwood.

SUPPORT PROJECT

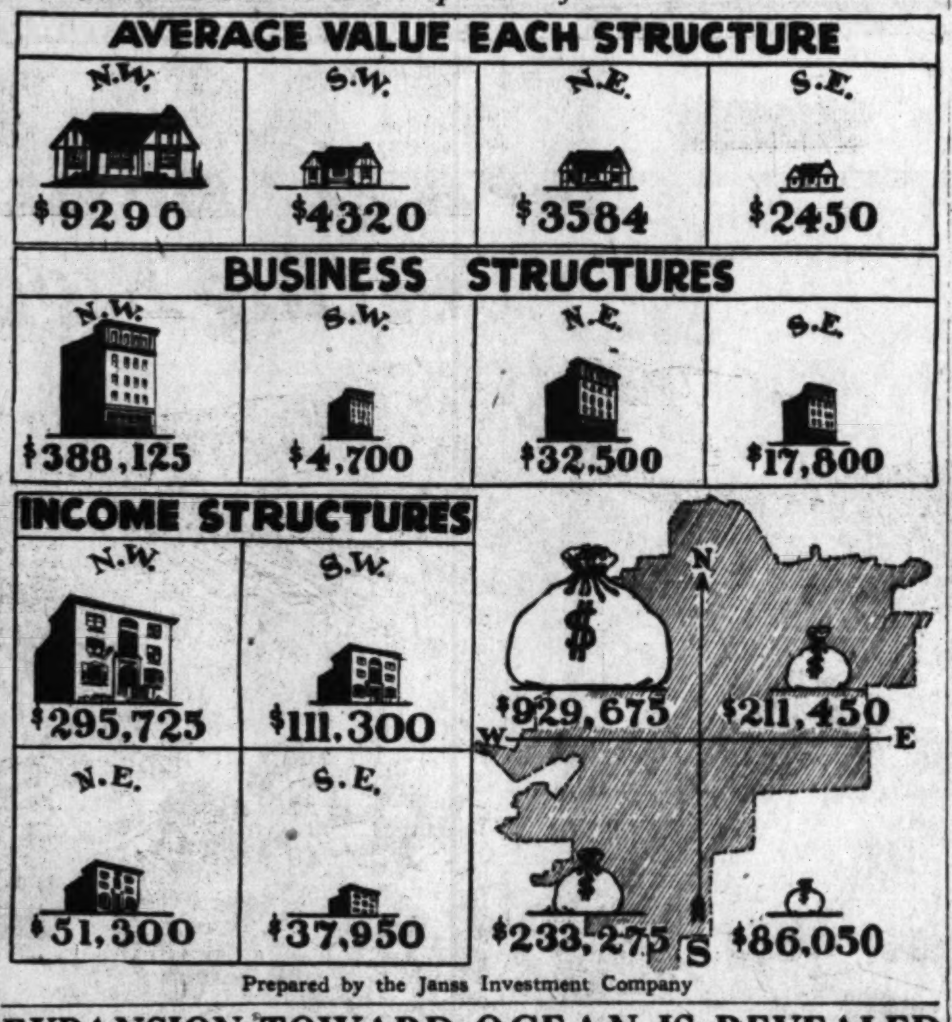
The proposed Shoreham own-your-own Apartment-Hotel to be erected on the Palisades of Santa Monica has aroused the support of practically every civic and business organization in the beach city, according to the Frank Meline Company, which has just taken over the sale of the apartments.

FLAT CONTRACT LET

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE]

HUNTINGTON PARK, May 31. Elemina Tryon and Mary Rossiter have just let a contract for the erection of a large two-story, four-family flat building to be erected on South Stafford street, at a cost of $12,000.

Chart Discloses Development of Various Districts



Prepared by the Janss Investment Company

EXPANSION TOWARD OCEAN IS REVEALED

Survey Completed by Statistical Department of Janss Investment Company Indicates Development of Area Toward Northwest

The consistent growth of the city northwestward to the ocean is shown by figures compiled from building department records of the city and submitted by the statistical department of the Janss Investment Company. According to the figures submitted, the northwestward growth of the city in building activity is considerably more than the three other sections of Los Angeles combined.

"In compiling these figures, which we believe to be accurate and secured from a reliable source, we used permits issued for the constructions of new buildings only. Also the small number of permits issued for the San Pedro-Wilmington district as well as the downtown section were not included," states Harold Janss, head of the company.

"For the period investigated permits were issued as follows:

Northwest	$ 929,675
Southwest	233,275
Northeast	211,450
Southeast	86,050
Total	$1,460,450

"The total for the northwest section shows approximately double those for the southwest, northeast and southeast districts combined.

"In permits issued for residential structures the northwest district led with $245,825. Southwest followed with $117,275; the northeast with $127,650 and the southeast with $37,300.

"In permits issued for income structures the northwest led with $295,725. Southwest followed with $111,300; the northeast with $51,300 and the southeast with $37,950.

"In permits issued for business structures the northwest led with $388,125; southwest followed with $4700; the northeast with $32,500, and the southeast with $17,800.

"These figures show that the northwest district leads by a wide margin in each class of building, residential, income and business.

"It has been the contention of many experts that the district of Los Angeles with the greatest future was northwest to the sea. These figures bear out the worth of their opinions.

"Santa Monica and Wilshire boulevards have been designated as the two great thoroughfares of the future, the future community 'Broadways' of Greater Los Angeles."

Flour exports during nine months period ending March were 14,065,000 barrels and 11,926,000 barrels, respectively. The world exports of wheat and flour during the nine months ending March, 1923 and 1924, were 557,575,000 bushels and 582,666,000 bushels, respectively. The world exports of all bread cereals from August 1, 1923, to April 12, last, amounted to 594,000,000 bushels or 67,000,000 more than for the same period last year, according to authoritative private statistics. The exports of coarse grains, on the other hand, amounted to 241,000,000 bushels or 35,000,000 less than for the previous year. Corn is the grain which showed the greatest loss, some 51,000,000 bushels less being exported this year than last.

GRACELAND CEMETERY CHIEF TOURING EAST

Daniel R. Hull, landscape engineer of the national parks of America, left yesterday on a tour of the East to make a careful study of the landscaping of the largest and most beautiful cemeteries of Chicago, Detroit, New York, Boston, Philadelphia and other cities. His tour is made on behalf of the founders of Graceland Cemetery, recently established on rolling hills among the orange groves near Norwalk, an hour from the heart of Los Angeles. "I intend to do all within my power to make Graceland the most beautiful cemetery in America, a fitting cemetery for the world's most beautiful city," declared Hull before leaving.

NEW SHOWHOUSE PLANNED

Carthay Center to Get Fine Theater Structure Devoted Exclusively to Spoken Drama

Announcement made recently by Joe Toplitzky and a syndicate of local capitalists that they plan to build a new theater for the spoken drama at Carthay Center to be known as the Carthay Center Playhouse, has been confirmed, details of the project having been made public yesterday.

The new theater is to be of the same high character as the Biltmore, both in its appearance, appointments and in the class of entertainment. With the Mason, in which Mr. Toplitzky is also largely interested, it will be the third legitimate theater which he will control with his associates.

According to the plans now being completed by Carleton Monroe Winslow, the measurements of the playhouse will be 153x80 feet. The architecture is to be modified Spanish colonial, while the building is to be decorated with richly carved stonework, with panels in which will be insets of colored glazed Mexican tile from Puebla and Oaxaca, Mex. It will reflect types to be found in many cities of Spain and France.

Coming into the theater from the street one will pass through an arcade and enter a foyer, on one side of which will be the men's smoking-room and toilets, on the other the women's rest rooms, and in the center, facing the street, the coat and cloakroom. The auditorium will be sloped at such an angle that every one of the 900 seats, all on the main floor, will afford a perfect view of the stage. The interior decorations will be done in polychrome, and will be in keeping with the Spanish colonial architecture of the exterior.

The stage is to be treated in such a way that it becomes the most important part of the building. Its architectural details are to be impressive and handsome. The stage itself is to be 34x66 feet, unusually large for this type of theater. Though the playhouse is to be strictly legitimate in character, a motion-picture operating room will be installed for producing colored lighting effects.

Construction of the playhouse is expected to commence as soon as Mr. Winslow has completed drawings and specifications. It is to be leased to well-known theatrical interests, with whom negotiations are now in process of completion. Cost is estimated at $350,000.

CONTRACTORS TO FROLIC

Biltmore Hotel Will Be Scene of Annual Banquet of Association Thursday Evening

The problems and perplexities which attend the construction industry will be laid aside for a few brief hours next Thursday evening when five hundred local builders, bankers, material men and architects gather in the ballroom of the Biltmore Hotel for the fifth annual banquet of the Southern California Chapter, Associated General Contractors of America.

Officials of the chapter claim that the affair will outdo all past functions sponsored by the organization and promise an evening's entertainment that long will be remembered. Departing from the usual procedure of such occasions, there will be no speechmaking on the program other than a short address by the chapter president, William Simpson of the William Simpson Construction Company. J. C. Edwards, former president of the local organization, will act as toastmaster and introduce Mr. Simpson.

The character of entertainment and fun-making to be featured is not being made public by the committee in charge of arrangements, but it is understood that music, song and feminine charm will consume the major part of the program. E. A. Irish is chairman of the program committee.

FILE INCORPORATION PAPER

Big Bear Estates Company Formed to Develop Shay and Barker Ranch

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

REDLANDS, May 31.—Articles of incorporation of the Big Bear Estates Company, which recently made the purchase of the Shay & Barker ranch in Bear Valley, paying for it three quarters of a million dollars, have just been filed in the office of County Clerk Harry Allison.

The incorporators are J. M. Warren, Santa Barbara, and J. H. Poppelman and Arthur Munn of Los Angeles. Mr. Warren is a capitalist and the other two men are subdividers. The company is capitalized for $1,500,000.

Development of the property, including the grading of a golf course, erecting of hotel buildings and a country-club building and other needed buildings is planned for this summer. The property consists of about 3000 acres on the shores of Baldwin Lake and extending through the meadow land of the valley.

This is to be one of the largest developments in Bear Valley for this summer, but is really only one of several planned. Practically every big tract in the valley has now been taken and will soon be subdivided.

BARBECUE WILL MARK DEDICATION

Keyes to be Principal Speaker at La Quinta Club Festival

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

SANTA SUSANA, May 31.—Entertainment for thousands of guests at a big Spanish barbecue and outdoor musical and singing festival will be provided tomorrow to celebrate the dedication of the La Quinta Country and Golf Club in the Santa Susana Hills, about forty miles from Los Angeles.

Dist.-Atty. Keyes will be the principal speaker on the program, which will be featured with vaudeville selections, song recitals and wild west performances arranged under the direction of E. D. Horkheimer and Harry Barker, chairmen of the reception committee.

The new club was organized by E. Tropp, president, and Al G. Faulkner, vice-president of the Tropp Realty Investment Corporation of Los Angeles, which recently acquired a 3200-acre tract in picturesque Santa Susana Canyon.

An invitation to the public to participate in the festivities has been extended by Tropp and Faulkner, who engaged John Duncan Dunn, noted expert, to build the golf course for the club. Tropp stated today that everything will be free, including the barbecue, entertainment and adequate parking space for automobiles.

Construction engineers on the property reported to Tropp today that plans are being rushed for the completion of new roads and other improvements in connection with the development of the enterprise.

Paper Company Planning Shop at South Gate

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

SOUTH GATE, May 31.—It is reported that the Zellerbach Paper Company, which several months ago secured land in the newly annexed territory in the east part of the city is at work on plans for a large mill to be built on their grounds, perhaps during the present year.

Construction work is to start on the Bent Bros. Pipe Company's shops and the Portland Cement Company will begin work on their plant on the completion of Bent street.

Three thousand men will be working in these plants when the new buildings are in operation, it is estimated.

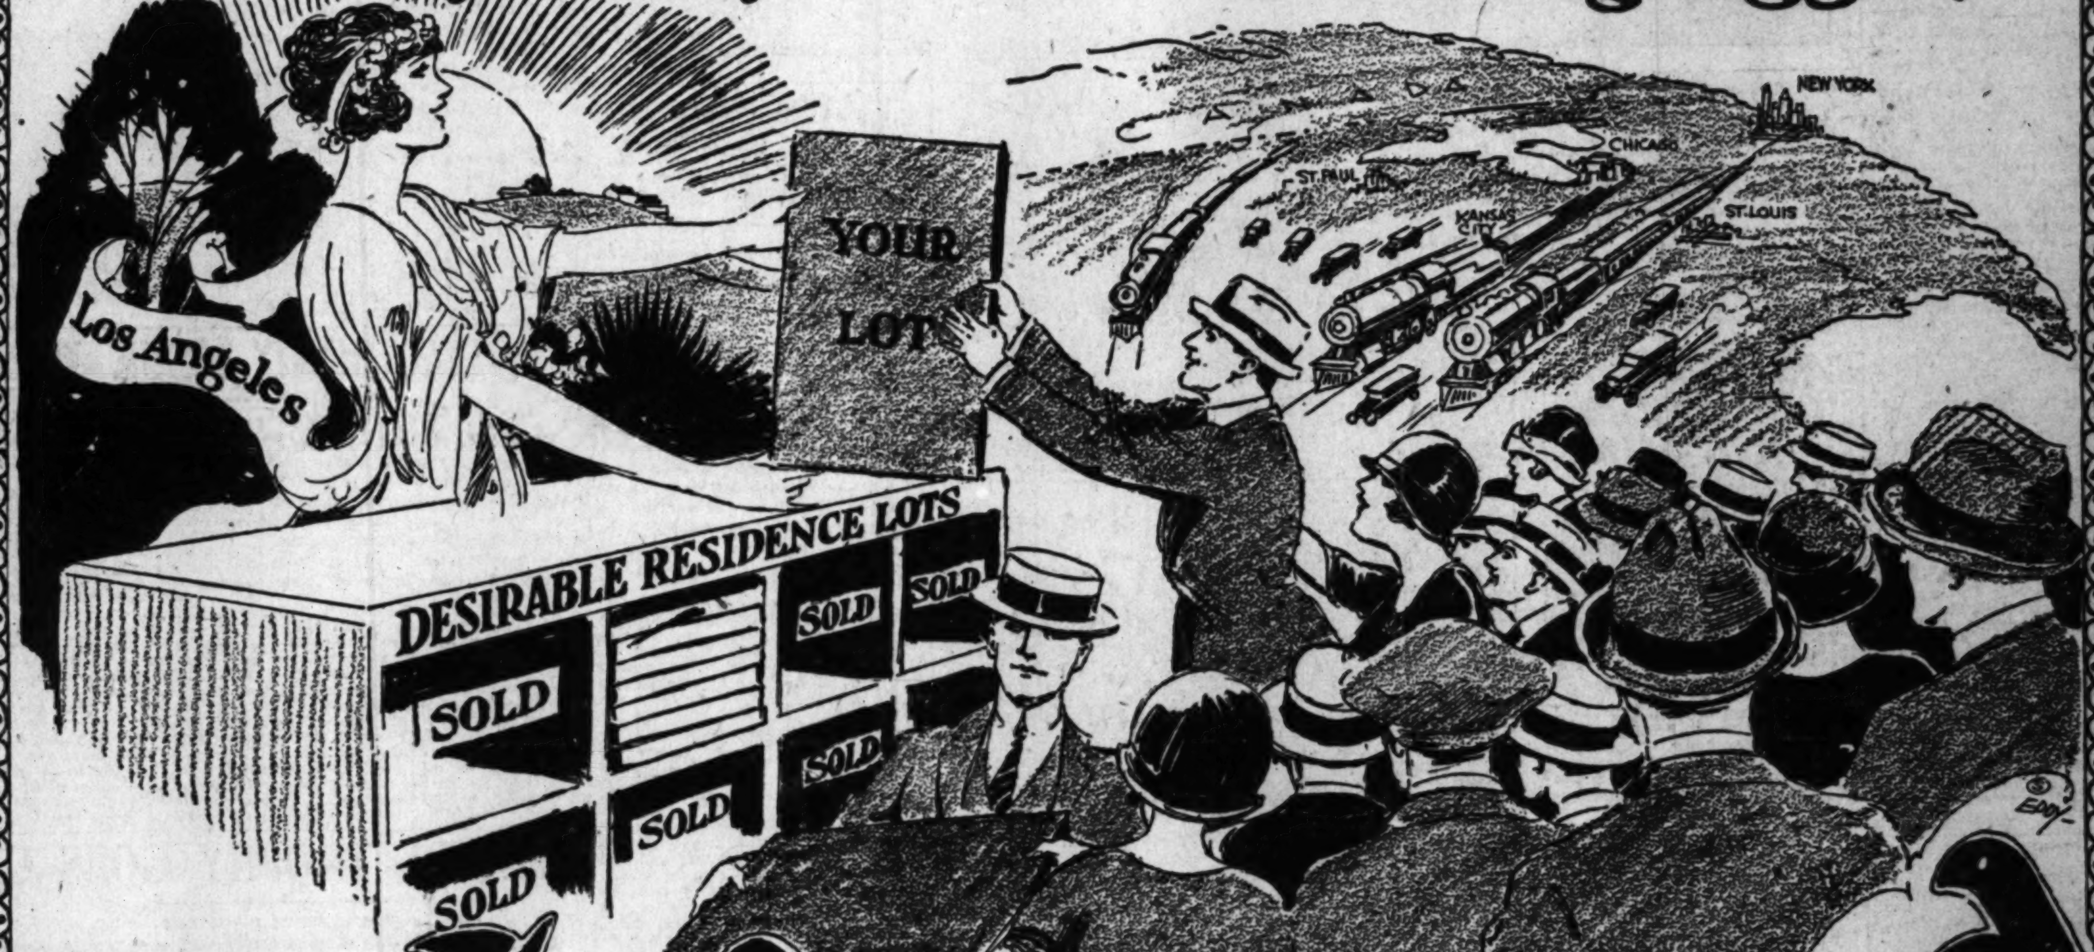
Nearly Gone! Getting Bigger!



Westwood

"The Second Hollywood"

No Fact can be Plainer!

There is only a limited amount of desirable residence property between Los Angeles and the West Beaches in the path of TODAY'S Big Development.

Today, with our population of only ONE million, IT IS NEARLY ALL GONE.

Yet, Los Angeles is growing today at the rate of thousands of PERMANENT residents per month.

Experts see no alternative than our city will be PACKED SOLID to the Sea.

People who will want to live in the desirable districts will have to pay BIG premiums for that privilege. Newcomers of means will GLADLY pay those premiums.

The only way to protect yourself and guarantee a desirably located residence in the future is to ACT TODAY!!

"There are hundreds of families of moderate means who can, by buying now at original prices, afford to own a desirable residence lot in the new fast-growing section of Los Angeles. If they do not take advantage of this opportunity today they will have to give up hope, forever, of living in a 'choice' district." Those are the words of a keen Los Angeles financier who comes in financial contact with dozens of people daily.

Protection as well as Profit

Desirable Residence Lots will be hard to get at any Price!

A desirable residence lot bought today is a PROTECTION against high prices as much as anything else. There are thousands of people with a few hundred dollars saved up who can secure a desirable lot TODAY at original prices and easy terms and thus make it possible to have a home "in a fine district" when they will want it. It is to those people that we issue this warning. It is easy for them to lay the right foundation if they act today.

QUELLS REPORT ABOUT BUILDING

Local Executives Disclose Demand for Homes

More Inquiries for Houses Than Ever Before

Figures of One Company Reveal Condition

In spite of the fact that unfavorable reports are being circulated throughout the East concerning the general business situation of Los Angeles and vicinity by persons unfamiliar with the condition, several executive officials of local building and investment houses have taken an exception to the false information being spread over the country and have shown that conditions here are not only progressing but entirely different from reports emanating from foreign sources.

A prominent local official of one of the largest building companies in the West, if not the world, states that facts are to the contrary as far as building and housing conditions in Los Angeles are concerned. "Everything seems to point to progression; in fact, at this time we are having more inquiries for homes than at any time in the last year and queries are for better homes. This seems to put all rumors to an end."

MANY HOMES SOLD

W. H. Harrison, general manager of a large Los Angeles building and subdividing organization, says that for the months of January, February, March and April his firm sold 133 homes at an approximate consideration of $740,726 and 143 lots at a total of $1,266,075. In May inquiries for homes have increased over March and April, while sales have exceeded a home a day.

"Of the thousands of persons making monthly payments on homes purchased from us," Mr. Harrison states, "we have only a negligible number of arrears; no more than a year ago. We have not had one foreclosure in eight years and not one home has been returned to us this year. Our street building, grading and cement crews, as well as our building organization are working as usual with absolutely no cut in wages and none contemplated.

A HOUSE A DAY

"Our program calls for a completed home every day in the month. At this time nearly 100 homes are in various stage of construction, and as it requires three to four months to complete a home, our sales at this time are exceeding our building program. Our present average for residence sales has been in excess of one a day which is considerably more than the record established last year."

Mr. Harrison cites instances where men have sought work as carpenters, but have been rejected because their crews were complete. "I have had men come to me and ask for work and upon being told that there was no work available at present, they would demand a letter stating that they had asked for work and that no work was available." Whereupon they would take these letters and flood the East with literature advising men not to come here for employment."

REALTY TREND ANALYSIS MADE

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE]

SAN DIEGO, May 31.—The pronounced movement in real estate here in the last two or three years has opened up many tracts north, east and southeast of the city, with probably the greatest single development being witnessed along the ocean front between Ocean Beach and La Jolla, and including such heretofore comparatively dormant districts as Mission Beach, Pacific Beach and Bird Rock.

Increased population has influenced this movement, which, according to O. W. Cotton, president of the Pacific Building Company and recognized as one of the leading authorities here on realty values and conditions, seems certain to continue indefinitely and to particularly influence the development of beach sections. Analyzing conditions affecting the present realty status of local real estate, Cotton said:

"It has been interesting to watch the spasmodic movements in real estate in the past, swinging from place to place as San Diego has grown, virtually representing small booms, with this difference: That while values in certain sections have risen fast, in few cases have prices dropped back to their former values, as is the case with the usual boom.

"East San Diego, Mission Hills, virtually all of the property lying within three and one-half miles of the center of the city, have developed within a comparatively short time, from practically no valuation to the place where best lots in these sections now bring as high as $3000. Fine improvements, both civic and private, justify these values.

"I have seen West End spring in ten years' time from sage brush to the point where land brings $1500 to $1800 for the best residence lots, while business lots are 'out of sight,' as they say. Then here the pendulum swung back once more to East San Diego, where population has once more doubled in the last three or four years.

"During all this time La Jolla has shown a steady growth, so that lots there now bring from $1000 to $5000 in good locations. This, mind you, is fifteen miles from the center of San Diego. Ocean Beach residence lots have leaped in twenty years from nothing to as high as $5000.

"The intermediate property, in the meantime, has lain dormant, held in large ownerships. Now big interests are starting to work to spend vast sums on its development.

"Three things will make it grow faster, in my opinion, than anything in recent years. The first is the fact that its particular environment is such that these districts from La Jolla to Loma Portal, including Loma Alta, Mission Beach, Pacific Beach and La Jolla-Hermosa, lend themselves to a class of development not possible to any other district around San Diego. They are somewhat different from what may be found anywhere in Southern California.

"The second reason is that large sums of money are being spent and will be spent to develop these properties on a greater scale than anything before attempted here. This necessarily will have a tremendous influence on increasing values.

"The third reason is the location of some of these districts, particularly Loma Alta, being close to the business part of the city. With the opening recently of the new street car extension to the beaches, this section is accessible to Fifth and Broadway within fifteen minutes, making it available to many more people and when all is said and done, the value of real estate is dependent entirely upon the number of people who want it.

"The bigger a city gets, the more desirable it is as a place to live. More people like to stay here and they induce their friends to come with a constant consequent expansion of population and places must be provided for them to live. The most desirable residence sections are usually considered those with pleasant outlook, with view and accessibility to the city. Little of this class of property is still left undeveloped, except that between the beaches and the city. For that reason I predict that the next great movement in real estate will be in that direction."

READY-CUT HOMES CHIEF TOURING EAST

Leaving for the East last Tuesday for an extended business trip which will take him to the leading cities throughout the country, W. P. Butte, president of Pacific Ready-Cut Homes, Inc., expects to conclude arrangements for the distribution of Pacific homes in several of the active home-building centers. He is going direct to Steubenville, O., where a large number of Pacific homes are now under course of construction and will confer with officials of the Beverly Building Company, who are distributors of Pacific homes in Ohio. From there he will go to Philadelphia and New York for the purpose of purchasing additional woodworking machinery for the firm's local mill. His itinerary will also take him to lumber centers in Michigan and Wisconsin. Mr. Butte expects to be away for six weeks.

SMALL HOUSES FOR INSPECTION

City Terrace Opens Doors to Attractive Display

Homes of Every Description for Public Approval

Exhibition Daily for Period of Eight Weeks

Preparations have been made to receive a large crowd at the opening of the California Complete Small Houses Exposition this afternoon in City Terrace. An elaborate program of entertainment will be begun at 2:30 p.m. in the newly-constructed outdoor auditorium on the exposition grounds. Doors of the model homes will be opened for the first time to the public at 1 p.m.

A complete education in home making at low cost is provided in the space of one solid block of ideal small dwellings, designed by members of the American Institute of Architects and completely furnished by the leading interior decorators of Barber Brothers. The entire exposition, including an outdoor display of building materials and household equipment, covers more than five acres, the principal exhibits being eleven model "exposition homes."

F. A. Feitshans, president of the exposition, will open the program today with a brief explanation of the purposes of the enterprise, which is co-operative in nature and includes the leading specialists in all phases of home making in Los Angeles. "It is our hope," said Mr. Feitshans yesterday, "that the standard of beauty and comfort in the small homes of Los Angeles will be definitely raised from now on as a result of this demonstration of how to secure the best possible results with a very small expenditure of money."

Following the opening address the musical program will be given by Dr. Hiner's fifty-piece band. A large outdoor auditorium has been erected in the center of the exposition grounds with a seating capacity of more than 5000.

Special educational and entertainment features have been planned for each Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday afternoon under the direction of Miss Berenice Hull, formerly head of the domestic science department of the Sun-Maid Raisin Growers Association and the Sunset Press. All topics of interest to the women of the family will be covered in these free lectures and demonstrations from cookery to beauty culture, it is stated. Prominent musicians and dancers have also been secured for these feature days.

One of the outstanding features of the exposition is the electrical house prepared under the supervision of the California Co-operative Electrical Campaign. Every bit of household work is done at small expense in this home by the simple turning of a switch or the touch of a button. Electrical labor-saving devices displayed in this house are not expensive and can be used and enjoyed by every member of the family from baby with his bottle warmer to father with his electric heater for the morning shave.

Rigid limitations on the costs of all objects in the houses have been maintained. The largest five-room house can be duplicated anywhere in Los Angeles for $3500, it is stated, and the price of the furniture and equipment is entirely in keeping with this low figure. Several of the houses have been delightfully furnished at a cost of less than $110 a room, according to A. D. Smith of Barker Brothers, who has had complete charge of the installation of the furniture.

Automobile parking space has been provided for thousands of machines inside the main automobile entrance which is just across Valley Boulevard from the Ascot Speedway. Special arrangements have also been made by the officials of the Pacific Electric and the Los Angeles Railway for extra service on the Covina-El Monte line of red cars and the Brooklyn-avenue line of yellow cars.

The decision of the committee to admit the public to the exposition and to all its features absolutely without charge has been dictated by the hope that many people will thus feel free to visit the model houses again and again to study the methods used by the expert designers in achieving the remarkable results without spending large sums of money.

The exposition is a co-operative enterprise organized under the direction of the following executive committee representing all phases of home making in Los Angeles:

F. R. Feitshans, president, East Side Organization, Inc.; A. D. Smith, Barker Bros.; W. H. Leimert, Walter H. Leimert Company; H. Du P. Bounetheau, American Institute of Architects; W. L. Frost, California Electrical Co-operative Campaign; Edward B. Rust, Nurseryman's Association; W. J. Sanborn, City Council; Hugh Pomeroy, Regional Planning Commission; Henry P. Barbour, California Real Estate Association; J. H. Bean, County Board of Supervisors; Lawrence Block, City Subdivision Company; C. H. Ellison, supervising engineer, and Hervey M. Porter, Los Angeles Realty Board.

SAN DIEGO COUNTY IS BOOMING

Active Development in Northern Areas Reported from Escondido

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

ESCONDIDO, May 3.—Straight ahead with real estate and building development is the slogan of back country of San Diego, north, east, south and west of the county seat.

In Escondido today the cornerstone was laid for a $12,000 community memorial building by the J. B. Clark Post, American Legion.

In Fallbrook the irrigation committee has submitted its second report on plans for obtaining a large supply of water from the Santa Margarita River, which flows through the Temecula Canyon and to the sea through the great Santa Margarita ranch, above Oceanside. The town has also authorized the committee in charge of the sinking of a municipal well to go the limit of 300 feet, although enough water for the present needs of the community has been developed at a less depth. It has also been decided to complete the paving of the main street through the town, and a portion of Alvarado street.

In Ramona property owners are installing curb on the main street, on which the county is doing the paving, and a decision has also been reached to extend the paving to the sidewalks at the expense of the abutting property owners. A lighting district is also being formed at Ramona.

In Oceanside recent sales go to show the marked advance in the values of improved real estate, one sale, in the business section of the city showing a net profit to the seller of $3000 in less than three years. The new theater building is to be two stories instead of one as originally planned. Construction will be commenced soon on the $80,000 worth of new buildings and improvements at the Union High School.

In Carlsbad the Union Sunday School Associated will shortly commence the erection of a church, on lots donated by the South Coast Land Company. A score of sales of realty have been made at Carlsbad within the last two weeks.

Vista and Bonsall announce the completion of the inland highway paving between Vista and the San Luis Rey River, thus stimulating motor travel.

SEVERAL INDUSRIES.

The Hynes-Clearwater district boasts a number of industries. Among these are the Brown Process Refining Company, Cristal Petroleum Products Corporation, Associated and Standard Oil plants and General and Midway refineries. On the Reuther Tract a well has been drilled to a depth of 4000 feet with good prospects for oil.

Hynes and Clearwater are emerging from the country-town era by laying fifteen-foot sidewalks and curbs. A new newspaper, the Hynes-Clearwater Journal, has recently been started and the new Chamber of Commerce organized by the two towns had an initial membership of ninety-five business men.

SHOW SURFACED SHINGLES

Pioneer Paper Company Manufactures Roof Material Used in Small-Home Exhibit

Slate-surfaced shingles manufactured by the Pioneer Paper Company at its Los Angeles plant are due for an acid test during the next eight weeks, in the opinion of officials of the company. There are eleven homes, completely equipped and furnished, that serve as models for the California Complete Small Homes Exposition opening today at City Terrace and continuing for the next two months.

Two of these homes have been roofed by the Pioneer Paper Company with the slate-surfaced shingles which the company manufactures. The reception of the roofing, naturally, will be watched with the utmost concern by Pioneer experts.

One of the homes is roofed in plain, red slate-surfaced shingles, providing the contrast so common, yet so pleasing, that is an integral part of the Spanish influence in architecture throughout Southern California.

Another is in two colors—red and green, heightening the artistic effect, and giving an idea of the myriad color combinations that can be formed from slate-surfaced shingles should the owner desire. Probably one of the most pleasing factors of the Pioneer's participation in the small homes exposition is the fact that it demonstrates the economical advantages of the slate-surfaced shingle.

The lasting ability, and the fire and water-proof qualities of the slate-surfaced shingles are attained, according to the manufacturers, by means of the asphalt compound that is used to impregnate felt, the basic material used in making the shingle. The asphalt is pressed into the felt in accordance with the formula conceived by engineers. Years of experimentation and actual tests have proved their contentions, it is claimed. They also point to asphaltic combinations in use for more than 350 commercial purposes at the present time as demonstrative of its efficiency.

Once the shingle has gone through its impregnation process, it is subjected to a covering of crushed slate, which is said to effectually water-proof the surface, prevent dust and dirt from gathering and lend an attractive artistic value to the roof as a whole.

TO DEVELOP NEW DISTRICT

Recent Realty Transactions Start New Impetus in Construction at Alhambra

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE]

ALHAMBRA, May 31.—A real estate sale was announced this week which is expected to mark the first step in the development of an East Main-street business frontage which has been, by reason of the character of the ground, somewhat of a hindrance to the progress of business eastward.

The transaction covers 328 feet on the south side of Main, between Chapel and Almanser, formerly part of the Clapp property, and is the frontage of Arroyo land which is about eighteen feet below the level of the street. It was purchased last fall from R. B. Clapp.

The buyer is Henry W. Leigh of Newburgh, N. Y., who spent several weeks in Alhambra last winter. The price paid is understood to have been approximately $175 a front foot. The deal was placed in escrow in February, but has only just been closed.

TO IMPROVE SITE

The new owner of the property expects to improve the site with business buildings as soon as plans for a culvert have been approved. The owners of the land on the opposite side of Main street, also an arroyo location, announce that they expect to erect substantial business buildings in the near future.

With the contemplated development of this stretch between Chapel and Almansor an unsightly gap in the East Main-street business district will have been closed.

The Presbyterian Church of Alhambra, at a meeting of the congregation held Wednesday night, voted to purchase the Donahue property on the north side of Commonwealth avenue, between First and Garfield, as the site for a new church edifice.

The property has a frontage of 100 feet on both First and Garfield and extends the entire block on Commonwealth. An option to purchase the land has already been secured and steps will be taken immediately to acquire the site. The purchase price was not made public.

MANY CHURCH UNITS

A permanent church-building committee, headed by William S. Preugh, has been appointed to carry out the plans of the church. The first unit of the new plant will consist of a building to house the Sunday-school and young peoples' activities.

The decisions of the church to locate the proposed new building on a new site was taken after several months of investigation. The present church structure at 20 South Second street has been for a long time inadequate to take care of the rapidly growing church activities. Additions have been made from time to time. The church was founded in 1888 and its present pastor is Dr. S. J. Kennedy.

Before his departure Mr. Blumenthal stated that he has already been promised money and is going east to outline several Los Angeles projects with eastern capitalists. Details of these projects, he stated, will be disclosed in detail upon his return in three weeks.

He also announced that upon his return several big changes will be made in the firm of A. C. Blumenthal, Inc., one of which will be the increasing of the firm's capital stock.

According to present plans, Blumenthal will gradually retire from the detail end of the real estate business in order that he may devote his entire time to promoting Los Angeles improvements with foreign capital.

COURT UPHOLDS CLAIM OF REALTY BROKER

Once the papers in a real estate transaction are placed in escrow the realty broker is entitled to his commission even though one of the parties experiences a last-minute change of heart and refuses to complete the deal, according to the California Real Estate Association. This decision was handed down by Judge George R. Holbrook of Ontario recently in a case of O. G. Figgins, real estate broker, against Hugh P. Anderson, an Ontario rancher.

It developed that Mr. Anderson, through the agency of Mr. Figgins, had agreed to exchange citrus ranch property in Ontario valued at $6000 for business property in Republic, Kan., owned by Joe G. and Hannah L. Read. After an appraisement had been made by a bank in Republic, Kan., Mr. Anderson agreed to go ahead with the transaction and the papers were placed in escrow in an Ontario bank. Subsequently, Mr. Anderson changed his mind, and refused to pay Mr. Figgins, who had acted as his agent, so the latter sued.

Mr. Figgins held that he had completed his end of the deal and was entitled to compensation. The court allowed the realty broker $250, due as commission and $25 attorney's fees and the cost of the suit.

Population of 500,000 for Orange County Community Seen if Harbor Program Is Carried Out

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

SANTA ANA, May 31.—Visualizing Orange county as one city extending from Fullerton on the north to Newport Beach on the west and south, Linn L. Shaw, chairman of the former Orange County Harbor Commission, declared in an address delivered here that such a project would become a reality with proper development of Orange county harbor at the latter city.

Had the harbor undergone development laid out for it twenty-five years ago such a county-city would have had a population of 500,000 today, Shaw declared, adding that development at the present time would bring about a similar result in an even shorter period of time.

His remarks were considered timely in that a committee of fifty prominent men from all parts of the country has been selected to investigate harbor possibilities with a view to recommending a date when a bond project of $1,500,000 for derdging and construction work should be voted.

"When the commission a year ago filed its report with the Board of Supervisors," he stated, "and recommended calling for a bond issue of $1,000,000 with which to continue improving the harbor we realized the county had acquired 3900 feet of frontage and was in a position to gain by an expenditure.

"We have no cheap land undeveloped in Orange county and we can no longer appeal to newcomers from the standpoint of offering such property. It looks to me like our cities must develop on an industrial basis.

"The communities with the best industrial advantages are the cities that today are getting the big factories. The best advantage is low freight rates and efficient transportation. If we establish a port at Newport Bay we will have both."

WATER BOND ISSUE WINS

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE]

ANAHEIM, May 31.—Escaping defeat by the narrow margin of four votes, Anaheim's $110,000 water bond election was passed here this week, assuring the future growth and development of the city's subdivisions, and opening the way for many miles of new paving in Anaheim.

The bond election, which had been recognized as a vital factor in development here, was defeated in practically all precincts by a slight vote, but a heavy favorable vote in two precincts gave the necessary two-thirds majority with a margin of only four. The issue was marked by slight interest, with only 400 votes cast out of a registration of 3500 persons. Less than 100 ballots were counted in each of the six precincts.

Proper fire protection for homes in the outlying districts of the city will be provided by the bonds, and paving, which has been delayed because water pipes had not been installed on many streets in new subdivisions, can now go forward. In addition to this at least $10,000 will be expended for a fifth well, which will assure the city against water shortage.

The fund will also place Anaheim in position to join the county in a development program to provide a county-wide water system, operated under the same plan as the joint outfall sewer, which has just been completed. Tentative plans have already been made by the cities of Anaheim, Santa Ana, Fullerton and Orange for this water system, and Anaheim will immediately proceed with plans for a share of this work and a portion of the expense to be paid from this bond fund.

REALTY TROPHY GOES ON

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

ORANGE, May 31.—At a luncheon meeting here yesterday the "good-fellowship cup" recently awarded into temporary keeping of the Orange Realty Board, passed on its way around the State.

The cup was presented to the Huntington Beach Realty Board, which on next Thursday will pass it on to the Garden Grove organization. Before the cup reaches its destination—the State realty convention at Pasadena next August—it will have circulated among 105 realty boards.

The meeting yesterday was marked by high enthusiasm and the spirit of the goodfellowship trophy was manifest. The loving cup was presented to a committee from the beach board by Will A. Martin, president of the local board.

E. A. Suter, president of the Huntington Beach organization, accepted the trophy, responding with a short address. Others in the beach delegation included C. P. Patton, W. S. Tubach, J. K. McDonald and J. H. Hancock.

The meeting took place at Miles's cafeteria and was featured by an address by a representative of the State realty association, who outlined organization work in the north, stressing the importance of co-operation among the realtors.

City Terrace Opens Doors to Attractive Display

Homes of Every Description for Public Approval

Exhibition Daily for Period of Eight Weeks

Preparations have been made to receive a large crowd at the opening of the California Complete Small Homes Exposition this afternoon in City Terrace. An elaborate program of entertainment will be begun at 2:30 p.m. in the newly-constructed outdoor auditorium on the exposition grounds. Doors of the model homes will be opened for the first time to the public at 1 p.m.

A complete education in home making at low cost is provided in the space of one solid block of ideal small dwellings, designed by members of the American Institute of Architects and completely furnished by the leading interior decorators of Barber Brothers. The entire exposition, including an outdoor display of building materials and household equipment, covers more than five acres, the principal exhibits being eleven model "exposition homes."

F. A. Feitshans, president of the exposition, will open the program today with a brief explanation of the purposes of the enterprise, which is co-operative in nature and includes the leading specialists in all phases of home making in Los Angeles. "It is our hope," said Mr. Feitshans yesterday, "that the standard of beauty and comfort in the small homes of Los Angeles will be definitely raised from now on as a result of this demonstration of how to secure the best possible results with a very small expenditure of money."

Following the opening address the musical program will be given by Dr. Hiner's fifty-piece band. A large outdoor auditorium has been erected in the center of the exposition grounds with a seating capacity of more than 5000.

Special educational and entertainment features have been planned for each Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday afternoon under the direction of Miss Berenice Hull, formerly head of the domestic science department of the Sun-Maid Raisin Growers Association and the Sunset Press. All topics of interest to the women of the family will be covered in these free lectures and demonstrations from cookery to beauty culture, it is stated. Prominent musicians and dancers have also been secured for these feature days.

One of the outstanding features of the exposition is the electrical house prepared under the supervision of the California Co-operative Electrical Campaign. Every bit of household work is done at small expense in this home by the simple turning of a switch or the touch of a button. Electrical labor-saving devices displayed in this house are not expensive and can be used and enjoyed by every member of the family from baby with his bottle warmer to father with his electric heater for the morning shave.

Rigid limitations on the costs of all objects in the houses have been maintained. The largest five-room house can be duplicated anywhere in Los Angeles for $8500, it is stated, and the price of the furniture and equipment is entirely in keeping with this low figure. Several of the houses have been delightfully furnished at a cost of less than $110 a room, according to A. D. Smith of Barker Brothers, who has had complete charge of the installation of the furniture.

Automobile parking space has been provided for thousands of machines inside the main automobile entrance which is just across Valley Boulevard from the Ascot Speedway. Special arrangements have also been made by the officials of the Pacific Electric and the Los Angeles Railway for extra service on the Covina-El Monte line of red cars and the Brooklyn-avenue line of yellow cars.

The decision of the committee to admit the public to the exposition and to all its features absolutely without charge has been dictated by the hope that many people will thus feel free to visit the model houses again and again to study the methods used by the expert designers in achieving the remarkable results without spending large sums of money.

The exposition is a co-operative enterprise organized under the direction of the following executive committee representing all phases of home making in Los Angeles:

F. R. Feitshans, president, East Side Organization, Inc.; A. D. Smith, Barker Bros.; W. H. Leimert, Walter H. Leimert Company; H. Du P. Bounetheau, American Institute of Architects; W. L. Frost, California Electrical Co-operative Campaign; Edward B. Rust, Nurseryman's Association; W. J. Sanborn, City Council; Hugh Pomeroy, Regional Planning Commission; Henry P. Barbour, California Real Estate Association; J. H. Bean, County Board of Supervisors; Lawrence Block, City Subdivision Company; C. H. Ellison, supervising engineer, and Hervey M. Porter, Los Angeles Realty Board.

SAN DIEGO COUNTY IS BOOMING

Active Development in Northern Areas Reported from Escondido

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

ESCONDIDO, May 3.—Straight ahead with real estate and building development is the slogan of back country of San Diego, north, east, south and west of the county seat.

In Escondido today the cornerstone was laid for a $12,000 community memorial building by the J. B. Clark Post, American Legion.

In Fallbrook the irrigation committee has submitted its second report on plans for obtaining a large supply of water from the Santa Margarita River, which flows through the Temecula Canyon and to the sea through the great Santa Margarita ranch, above Oceanside. The town has also authorized the committee in charge of the sinking of a municipal well to go the limit of 300 feet, although enough water for the present needs of the community has been developed at a less depth. It has also been decided to complete the paving of the main street through the town, and a portion of Alvarado street.

In Ramona property owners are installing curb on the main street, on which the county is doing the paving, and a decision has also been reached to extend the paving to the sidewalks at the expense of the abutting property owners. A lighting district is also being formed at Ramona.

In Oceanside recent sales go to show the marked advance in the values of improved real estate, one sale, in the business section of the city showing a net profit to the seller of $3000 in less than three years. The new theater building is to be two stories instead of one as originally planned. Construction will be commenced soon on the $80,000 worth of new buildings and improvements at the Union High School.

In Carlsbad the Union Sunday School Associated will shortly commence the erection of a church, on lots donated by the South Coast Land Company. A score of sales of realty have been made at Carlsbad within the last two weeks.

Vista and Bonsall announce the completion of the inland highway paving between Vista and the San Luis Rey River, thus stimulating motor travel.

SEVERAL INDUSRIES.

The Hynes-Clearwater district boasts a number of industries. Among these are the Brown Process Refining Company, Cristal Petroleum Products Corporation, Associated and Standard Oil plants and General and Midway refineries. On the Reuther Tract a well has been drilled to a depth of 4600 feet with good prospects for oil.

Hynes and Clearwater are emerging from the country-town era by laying fifteen-foot sidewalks and curbs. A new newspaper, the Hynes-Clearwater Journal, has recently been started and the new Chamber of Commerce organized by the two towns had an initial membership of ninety-five business men.

SHOW SURFACED SHINGLES

Pioneer Paper Company Manufactures Roof Material Used in Small-Home Exhibit

Slate-surfaced shingles manufactured by the Pioneer Paper Company at its Los Angeles plant are due for an acid test during the next eight weeks, in the opinion of officials of the company. There are eleven homes, completely equipped and furnished, that serve as models for the California Complete Small Homes Exposition opening today at City Terrace and continuing for the next two months.

Two of these homes have been roofed by the Pioneer Paper Company with the slate-surfaced shingles which the company manufactures. The reception of the roofing, naturally, will be watched with the utmost concern by Pioneer experts.

One of the homes is roofed in plain, red slate-surfaced shingles, providing the contrast so common, yet so pleasing, that is an integral part of the Spanish influence in architecture throughout Southern California.

Another is in two colors—red and green, heightening the artistic effect, and giving an idea of the myriad color combinations that can be formed from slate-surfaced shingles should the owner desire. Probably one of the most pleasing factors of the Pioneer's participation in the small homes exposition is the fact that it demonstrates the economical advantages of the slate-surfaced shingle.

The lasting ability, and the fire and water-proof qualities of the slate-surfaced shingles are attained, according to the manufacturers, by means of the asphalt compound that is used to impregnate felt, the basic material used in making the shingle. The asphalt is pressed into the felt in accordance with the formula conceived by engineers. Years of experimentation and actual tests have proved their contentions, it is claimed. They also point to asphaltic combinations in use for more than 350 commercial purposes at the present time as demonstrative of its efficiency.

Once the shingle has gone through its impregnation process, it is subjected to a covering of crushed slate, which is said to effectually water-proof the surface, prevent dust and dirt from gathering and lend an attractive artistic value to the roof as a whole.

TO DEVELOP NEW DISTRICT

Recent Realty Transactions Start New Impetus in Construction at Alhambra

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE]

ALHAMBRA, May 31.—A real estate sale was announced this week which is expected to mark the first step in the development of an East Main-street business frontage which has been, by reason of the character of the ground, somewhat of a hindrance to the progress of business eastward.

The transaction covers 338 feet on the south side of Main, between Chapel and Almanser, formerly part of the Clapp property, and is the frontage of Arroyo land which is about eighteen feet below the level of the street. It was purchased last fall from R. B. Clapp.

The buyer is Henry W. Leigh of Newburgh, N. Y., who spent several weeks in Alhambra last winter. The price paid is understood to have been approximately $175 a front foot. The deal was placed in escrow in February, but has only just been closed.

TO IMPROVE SITE

The new owner of the property expects to improve the site with business buildings as soon as plans for a culvert have been approved. The owners of the land on the opposite side of Main street, also an arroyo location, announce that they expect to erect substantial business buildings in the near future.

With the contemplated development of this stretch between Chapel and Almansor an unsightly gap in the East Main-street business district will have been closed.

The Presbyterian Church of Alhambra, at a meeting of the congregation held Wednesday night, voted to purchase the Donahue property on the north side of Commonwealth avenue, between First and Garfield, as the site for a new church edifice.

The property has a frontage of 100 feet on both First and Garfield and extends the entire block on Commonwealth. An option to purchase the land has already been secured and steps will be taken immediately to acquire the site. The purchase price was not made public.

MANY CHURCH UNITS

A permanent church-building committee, headed by William S. Preugh, has been appointed to carry out the plans of the church. The first unit of the new plant will consist of a building to house the Sunday-school and young peoples' activities.

The decisions of the church to locate the proposed new building on a new site was taken after several months of investigation. The present church structure at 20 South Second street has been for a long time inadequate to take care of the rapidly growing church activities. Additions have been made from time to time. The church was founded in 1888 and its present pastor is Dr. S. J. Kennedy.

TO GET MONEY IN EAST

For the purpose of acquiring more eastern millions for investment in Los Angeles real estate and improvements A. C. Blumenthal left yesterday for New York City and Philadelphia.

Before his departure Mr. Blumenthal stated that he has already been promised money and is going east to outline several Los Angeles projects with eastern capitalists. Details of these projects, he stated, will be disclosed in detail upon his return in three weeks.

He also announced that upon his return several big changes will be made in the firm of A. C. Blumenthal, Inc., one of which will be the increasing of the firm's capital stock.

According to present plans, Blumenthal will gradually retire from the detail end of the real estate business in order that he may devote his entire time to promoting Los Angeles improvements with foreign capital.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE]

ANAHEIM, May 31.—Escaping defeat by the narrow margin of four votes, Anaheim's $110,000 water bond election was passed here this week, assuring the future growth and development of the city's subdivisions, and opening the way for many miles of new paving in Anaheim.

The bond election, which had been recognized as a vital factor in development here, was defeated in practically all precincts by a slight vote, but a heavy favorable vote in two precincts gave the necessary two-thirds majority with a margin of only four. The issue was marked by slight interest, with only 400 votes cast out of a registration of 2500 persons. Less than 100 ballots were counted in each of the six precincts.

Proper fire protection for homes in the outlying districts of the city will be provided by the bonds, and paving, which has been delayed because water pipes had not been installed on many streets in new subdivisions, can now go forward. In addition to this at least $10,000 will be expended for a fifth well, which will assure the city against water shortage.

The fund will also place Anaheim in position to join the county in a development program to provide a county-wide water system, operated under the same plan as the joint outfall sewer, which has just been completed. Tentative plans have already been made by the cities of Anaheim, Santa Ana, Fullerton and Orange for this water system, and Anaheim will immediately proceed with plans for a share of this work and a portion of the expense to be paid from this bond fund.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

ORANGE, May 31.—At a luncheon meeting here yesterday the "good-fellowship cup" recently awarded into temporary keeping of the Orange Realty Board, passed on its way around the State.

The cup was presented to the Huntington Beach Realty Board, which on next Thursday will pass it on to the Garden Grove organization. Before the cup reaches its destination—the State realty convention at Pasadena next August—it will have circulated among 105 realty boards.

The meeting yesterday was marked by high enthusiasm and the spirit of the goodfellowship trophy was manifest. The loving cup was presented to a committee from the beach board by Will A. Martin, president of the local board.

E. A. Suter, president of the Huntington Beach organization, accepted the trophy, responding with a short address. Others in the beach delegation included C. P. Patton, W. S. Tubach, J. K. McDonald and J. H. Hancock.

The meeting took place at Miles's cafeteria and was featured by an address by a representative of the State realty association, who outlined organization work in the north, stressing the importance of co-operation among the realtors.

NOVEL SETTING FOR INTERIORS

rnishings for Small Home Economically Planned

cal Store Provides Cozy Inside Equipment

ooms Attract Attention of Prospective Buyer

One of the beauties of the Southland is her small homes. Surely no place in the world is the small home exalted to the position that it takes in Southern California. Miniatures of large home perfection is found at every hand. Study of small home architecture, careful planning of small home furnishings, have become such an art that some of the tiniest places are the most intriguing in point of interest and beauty.

In line with this marked interest in the small home, and in view of the tremendous appeal that this type of home holds for nearly everyone, the California Small Homes Exposition at City Terrace claims unprecedented interest. Each one is furnished completely though at modest cost with furniture and furnishings from Barker Brothers.

EXTERIORS ATTRACTIVE

The exteriors of the homes at once attract through their marked diversity of types, each one different, each with an appeal entirely its own. Furnishings in turn are made to reflect as ideally as possible the architectural atmosphere, to give comfort that could be desired, yet give it with a thought for economy and for very moderate expenditure.

There is a cozy three-room home with living-room and dining-room combined that has been furnished throughout with beautiful new-type furniture from Barker Brothers for as little as $417.70. The living-room is good size with two attractive rugs, table that serves a double purpose, comfortable chairs—quaint draperies. The bedroom ideally furnished—the kitchen with fine gas range and quality refrigerator.

To make the setting quite complete, a phonograph, the linen, lamps, pictures, china, glassware, have all been added as extras, making so delightful a picture that one feels tempted to move right in.

COST IS SMALL

In another, of the homes called "Valencia" living-room furniture and rugs cost but $102.75—dining-room furniture and rug only $77.50—bedroom furnishings totaling [illegible].75—which, when added to kitchen furnishings and the draperies, curtains and fixtures, amount to only $399.75.

Still another is furnished for [illegible]11.85—another for $523.30—and one of the most elaborate with living-room, two bedrooms and kitchen for only $1101.15.

Possibly one of the most unusual features is "Navarre"—furnished entirely from Barker Brothers' bargain stocks—with a total cost of only $374.45. Overstuffed davenport, chairs for comfort—ivory bedroom furniture—dining furniture and even to stove and refrigerator—all the pieces are used furniture yet present such an extraordinarily good appearance as to convince one that this economy is well worth while.

TEST FIREPROOF PAINT

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

WASHINGTON, May 24.—The Bureau of Standards is making tests of the Burnot fire-proofing paint. The same paint is also being tested by the building department of the city of Denver. The manufacturers of this paint make claims for it, which, if supported by tests and experience, will overcome a large part of the opposition to the use of lumber in places exposed to the initial sources of ignition, such as burning papers, embers, or brands, cigar and cigarette buts, gas jets, burning kerosene, gasoline or alcohol, electric short circuits, and other minor fire beginnings which are the cause of ninety per cent of all fires in buildings.

FOREST SURVEY ADVISED

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

WASHINGTON, May 24.—Addressing the annual meeting of the National Academy of Sciences here, Col. W. B. Greeley, United States Forester, suggested that the academy should undertake a survey of "the forest problem of the United States as it presents itself today; and particularly . . . direct the survey primarily toward the scientific background or foundation that is so essential to an effective solution of this problem."

MANY BUILDINGS UNDER WAY BY MEMBERS OF ASSOCIATED GENERAL CONTRACTORS HERE

The Southern California Chapter, Associated General Contractors of America, announces activities of some of its members for the last week as follows:

The Milwaukee Building Company was commissioned to prepare plans and specifications for a large one-story church, which is to be erected on Orange street near Burchett avenue for the First Church of Christ. The structure will be of the Class C brick type and will contain, in addition to a commodious auditorium seating 1200, a number of Sunday-school rooms and a large assembly hall. The cost of construction will be approximately $175,000.

WILL BUILD SCHOOL

William G. Reed, Long Beach, was awarded a contract at $110,400 for erecting the new Whittier city school unit in Long Beach. The design for this structure was prepared jointly by George M. Lindsay of Los Angeles and Harvey H. Lochridge of Long Beach. It will contain sixteen classrooms and a 450-seat auditorium. Brick construction will be carried out and the exterior will be trimmed with art stone.

Construction work on a one-story brick store and bank building at Wilmington for the Security Trust and Savings Bank has been started by the J. V. McNeil Company. The structure was designed by Western & Western, local architects, and will cover a ground area of 3600 square feet. The cost of construction will be approximately $14,000.

The Mann-Walker Building Company, specializing in small residences, bungalow courts and flat buildings, started work on a two-story flat building of ten units this week at the corner of Vermont avenue and Forty-first street. The building being erected for H. C. Ferestad, is of frame and stucco construction and will cost approximately $30,000.

The Mann-Walker Building Company also started work this week upon a two-story business block at Sawtelle for Vincent McCoy. The building will contain storerooms on the ground floor and lodge rooms above. The cost of construction will be $35,000.

The Lynch Construction Company is preparing to start work upon two wharf buildings at Wilmington for the Pacific Coast Borax Company. The structures will be built of steel and cover a ground area of 40 by 80 feet. They were designed by Albert C. Martin, local architect, and will cost approximately $18,000.

GETS STREET CONTRACT

George A. Simpson, Burbank, was awarded a contract by the City Trustees of Orange to improve a number of streets in the latter city. The work involves about thirty blocks of paving and will cost about $138,600.

Clarence P. Day Corporation received a contract from the Santa Monica City Council to pave Franklin street between Wilshire Boulevard and Colorado street at a cost of $16,937.54. The work will be started at once, officials of the company said.

Royce H. Heath plans to start work immediately upon the erection of a two-story residence for Mortimer R. Proctor at the northeast corner of Hudson avenue and Sixth street. The structure was designed by Webber, Staunton & Spaulding, local architects, and will cost about $55,000. Frame, hollow tile and stucco construction will be carried out.

Walter Slater has the contract to erect a two-story store and office building at 730 South Hope street for G. I. Jacoby. The building will cover an area of 40 by 116 feet and have one large shop on the ground floor with sixteen offices above. Class C brick construction will be carried out.

7813—A new subdivision lying outside of the city of Los Angeles and easterly of Maryland avenue and northerly of Ramona avenue; formally approved. The commission calls the attention of the county to the fact that a number of lots are below the minimum area of 4800 square feet.

6527—Held over to obtain the final decision as to the width of the industrial strip along the railroad.

6977—Held over to arrange for conference with the owner of the tract.

Subdivision bordering on the Pacific Ocean westerly of Marquez avenue; tentatively approved upon the following conditions: That, for streets having more than a 10 per cent grade, a profile must be submitted; that the necessary storm drain easements be granted; the lots are allowed below the minimum area on account of their hillside location and the fact that they are to be used for cabin sites only.

LEATHER MEN CO-OPERATE

It is interesting to note that out of that famed leather district of New York City, known as the "Swamp," have come the first co-operative movements of American industry. In fact, the leather tanners are probably the originators of the co-operative idea in the development of big enterprises. From the first project of this kind, beginning with the organization of The United States Leather Company in 1893 to the development of the Tanners' Council of America in 1917, and ending with the association of the sole and belting leather tanners in their present organization in 1923, the leather industry has been prolific in bringing about co-operation mediums for the furtherance of trade.

COOLIDGE AND SHINGLES WIN

Roofing Material and Chief Executive Features of Berkeley Voting

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

WASHINGTON (D. C.) May 17.—According to a telegram received by the National Lumber Manufacturers Association from the California Redwood Association, wooden shingles ran neck and neck with President Coolidge in the Berkeley primaries Tuesday, both defeating their opponents by 3000 majority.

The roofing contest grew out of the great fire in Berkeley a year ago which entailed a loss of about $8,000,000. Opponents of wooden shingles charged that the spreading of the fire from house-to-house was largely due to shingle rofs. Advocates of shingles maintained that this was not so and pointed out that all buildings in the full sweep of the fire were destroyed regardless of the nature of their material, and declared that their opponents were merely taking advantage of the situation to steal a trade march on their rivals.

JAPAN GOOD CUSTOMER

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

WASHINGTON (D. C.) May 31.—Although American exports of industrial machinery to Japan declined about $2,500,000 in 1923, Japan stands third among the countries of the world as a market for American machinery, according to the industrial machinery division of the Department of Commerce. In 1910 Japan was tenth on the list. Mexico is fifth in rank.

GOVERNMENT TESTS CUT PLUMBING COST

WASHINGTON, May 31.—A material cut in the cost of building construction is assured the home builder who follows the directions included in a booklet, "Recommended Minimum Requirements for Plumbing Installations in Dwellings and Similar Buildings," just released by the Department of Commerce. This report, which is the result of investigations and tests conducted under the direction of the department's housing division in co-operation with a group of engineers and expert plumbers, shows that a saving of from $50 to $100 can be affected in the plumbing costs of ordinary dwellings. In conducting these tests, whole systems of piping and fixtures similar to those in use in ordinary buildings were built, tested and wrecked to make way for others more economical in cost and efficient in operation.

Many Development Projects Outlined for Year

Progressive Towns Complete Busy Twelve Months

Union High School Asset to Five Communities

BY HELEN STARR

The greatest achievement of the progressive towns which lie in that beautiful country back of Long Beach and southwest of Los Angeles, is the erection of a spacious union high school which will serve a large surrounding territory. This new school is now in course of erection and is situated on the boundary line between the two school districts. The cost of the structures will be in excess of $600,000.

The buildings are so spacious and cover such a large acreage that the latest project resembles a fine university, motorists passing these new buildings being amazed at the size and beauty of the new Excelsior Union High School. The institution will be finished by fall and will supply educational facilities for the adjacent towns of Bellflower, Artesia, Norwalk, Carmenita, Bloomfield and La Mirada.

BELLFLOWER

Anyone who has passed through Bellflower in the last year or two will be surprised at the development which has taken place in this small city. Bellflower might be said to be a self-made town, as a syndicate headed by F. E. Woodruff, now a leading banker of Bellflower, bought 1200 acres of Jotham Bixby a very few years ago, and decided to transform the acreage into a town. Many Long Beach residents, crowded by the oil boom and high real estate prices, grasped the opportunity to locate in Bellflower and Los Angeles families who wished to live within country commuting distance of the city, found a home in this new town, the object of their desire.

The syndicate which put Bellflower on the market did not stop with the sale of residence lots. They built fifteen fine brick stores on the main street. F. E. Woodruff had such faith in the town's future that he erected a building costing $50,000 which now houses the First National Bank of Bellflower, a large dry goods store and hotel. This building is an achievement of the last year, the bank itself only having been organized a year ago last January.

DEPOSITS INCREASED

Bank deposits have increased 1000 per cent since organization. A beautiful new theater, costing $20,000 is pointed to with pride by residents of Bellflower. Excepting Los Angeles, Long Beach and Santa Ana, no other adjacent city can boast such a fine theater. A new two-story Masonic building was also erected in Bellflower last year.

Several hundred homes were erected in Bellflower last year. The county has paved the main boulevards with concrete and the side streets have been paved with decomposed granite. Some 800 pupils attend Bellflower schools. There are said to be more dairies situated between Bellflower and Compton than in any other similar area in the State, and none of these dairies were troubled by the hoof-and-mouth disease. The great Montana ranch of some 10,000 acres which is owned by Senator Clark, between Bellflower and Long Beach, is still being farmed with sugar beets, but it is now bisected by a new boulevard which gives Bellflower a new and direct connection with Long Beach. This boulevard is Somerset avenue.

Bellflower wishes to be known as a comfortable, happy home town and holds forth a welcome to newcomers from the East or city people who wish to live in this atmosphere.

DOWNEY

Downey is twelve miles from Los Angeles and fourteen miles from Long Beach. It is the hub of a number of fine paved boulevards. In this practically frostless district, evergreen citrus groves reach out from Downey in every direction. Citrus fruits grown in this district are estimated at $4,000,000 annually and deciduous fruits, $1,500,000. Downey has a large citrus packing-house and two preserving factories, the different branches of the fruit industry giving employment to a large percentage of the population.

Downey, like other towns in Southern California, has grown surprisingly in the last year. A new two-story office block houses seven stores. The new Masonic Building is a large brick structure, three stories in height. The Southern California Gas Company has erected a handsome building. The town boasts 100 new residences. Downey now has eleven churches, three having been erected in the last year. The new Baptist Church, built in the mission style of architecture cost $30,000 while a new Methodist Church cost $25,000. Downey also has a new Christian Science Church. A woman's club has its own clubhouse. A new Sunkist packing-house was erected in Downey last year, another unit of the Southern California Fruit Exchange.

INCREASE INDICATED

Downey's population is now estimated at 6000, an increase of 1000 in the last year. Some $40,000 was spent in enlarging the grammar school last year and $30,000 more has been voted for additions. Downey has its own high school. The town has two banks, a branch of the county public library, two weekly newspapers and a theater. The Rotary Club, Masons, Odd Fellows, Knights of Pythias and other lodges have chapters in Downey and the town has an active Chamber of Commerce.

The asbestos plant of the Emsco Company located here, employs 100 people. Downey has a $125,000 ice manufacturing plant. The Circular Concrete Block Company makes decorative and mantel brick. An abundant water supply makes general farming and truck raising profitable while produce is easily disposed of by means of motor transit reaching into Los Angeles food depots. Downey is served by the Southern Pacific Railway.

Two main streets in Downey will eventually lead directly into Los Angeles. First street has just been paved and will eventually serve as a link to the proposed extension of Manchester avenue. West Twelfth street in Downey is to be paved at once and will connect with Florence avenue leading into the south end of Los Angeles. This work will be finished by fall. The contract has been let to pave Second street in Downey and a petition is out to pave Third street. Ornamental street lights have recently been installed in Downey. Five new residence subdivisions were put on the market last year and one of these, the Orange Park tract, has been completely sold out. The town has its hopes of oil as land northeast, and a mile from the center of Downey, the C. C. Stahl well, has had splendid indications of oil. Land to the east and south near the Calpetro well has also been leased.

NORWALK

Climatic conditions at Norwalk are said to be nearly perfect. Cool ocean breezes sweeping across Los Nietos Valley produce an ideal condition in summer months, while the Puente Hills on the east protect this community from desert winds. The town is adjacent to the greatest oil field in California, Santa Fe Springs, and it is said, that all local residents have made big money in leasing lands or other oil investment. Dairying, general farming, citrus culture and poultry raising have also made Norwalk one of the leading agricultural sections of the Southland.

Norwalk is one of the oldest small towns in California, having been in existence as far back as forty years ago. Only a year ago the town still displayed old cowpaths, but in the last year all this has been changed. The greatest development in any little town has probably taken place in Norwalk in the last year. Business blocks and residences in the last year were erected at a cost of $552,000. The main business street is lined with a fine row of new business blocks. The Norwalk Commercial and Savings Bank, opened last July, has a splendid structure at First and Broadway and reports monthly increases in business. The entire town is to have sidewalks and curbs, new ornamental lights will be installed on Main and First streets and Broadway while First and Main will be paved. A new grammar school is to be erected at a cost of $75,000, while the active Woman's Club with eighty members will erect a new $10,000 clubhouse.

CHAMBER IS ASSET

The town's biggest asset in a civic way is its Chamber of Commerce with its 200 members and fine building. The Forum Club, composed of forty-five members, is another active local organization. Norwalk has three churches, and a branch of the Los Angeles county library. Norwalk is to have its own new library building next year as the site has already been purchased. A new fire station is to be built and new fire equipment costing $10,000 has been purchased. Norwalk is erecting large electric signs which will welcome visitors to the town as they travel on the main highway from Los Angeles to San Diego. The town is planning for a sanitary district and sewers.

Some 5000 dairy cows are to be found on farms adjacent to Norwalk. E. S. Hass, who bought the Anita Baldwin herd, has one of the largest dairies to be found in this part of the country. His herd is considered second only to the famous Hartsook herd, as it boasts many State and national champions. The sire, King Korndyke Pontiac Acme, brought $41,000.

Norwalk has profited from the oil boom of three years ago and now there seems to be good indications that the Carmenita field will be a new find. Some 2000 acres near Norwalk have been leased by the Petroleum Midway Company. A number of tank farms are also located near Norwalk, including the Union, Pan-American, Standard and Julian farms.

INDUSTRIAL HOMES

Norwalk hopes to follow up her success in oil with a steady industrial growth. Natural gas is being produced in enormous quantities in the adjacent oil fields and the Southern Pacific Railway Company can furnish wonderful manufacturing sites along their lines. The Santa Fe Railroad, which goes through Santa Fe Springs, is only one mile from Norwalk. Land ranges in price from $1000 to $2500 an acre for industrial sites and is only ten miles from the greater Los Angeles industrial districts. The Branden Tire Company is now located at Norwalk and manufactures an air cushion pneumatic cord tire and an air cushion tire. The Stay-White Company manufactures a composition drain board.

It is believed that Manchester avanue will eventually carry 80 per cent of the traffic headed south and it is already planned to have this boulevard go through Santa Ana. Norwalk has petitioned to have Manchester avenue extended through Broadway at the center of Norwalk which would mean much to the future development of the town.

ARTESIA

The word "artesia" means big, deep water. A number of springs and wells flowing with clear, healthful water were found at this location in early days, and the town was named after them. This natural advantage will soon be utilized in establishing a community health center, which, under the supervision of Dr. P. F. Haskell, will open about July 1. This health center will have surgical, medical, and maternity units, as well as a "keeping fit" unit.

Artesia has a population of about 2000. Bank deposits are about $550,000, a 60 per cent increase in the last year. A new bank building will be erected in the coming year. Additional ground was purchased last year at a cost of $4500 for the grammar school and $32,000 was spent for a new building. About fifty dwellings were erected. A new combination feed store, grocery and meat market has been erected and a new dry-goods store added to the town. Sidewalks and curbs are being planned for the main street and an effort is being made to have First street extended to the ocean, between Redondo and Hermosa beaches. There are no industries in Artesia, but farming and dairying and poultry raising are carried on extensively.

GARDEN INDUSTRY

Garden truck in large quantities is shipped from Artesia yearly. Some eighty-eight cars of cauliflower left the Artesia station over the Pacific Electric last year, as well as 178 cars of beets, forty-five of cabbage, twenty-four of tomatoes and others of lettuce, chili and other vegetables.

There are several large dairies near Artesia. The Crescent Creamery Company's dairy houses 725 cows; the Spears herd consists of 200; the Vorhies herd, 200, and the Huntley Gordon herd 200. The Harry Johnson & Son dairy has an all-pure-bred stock and is one of the finest equipped plants in the State. On the large poultry ranches, 11,000 white Leghorns make up the brood at the Frampton ranch, 2500 at the Hutcheson ranch and 2500 at the Carver ranch. Foster's Electric Hatchery, one of the largest in the world, has a capacity of 125,000 eggs. Dahlias grown at the Frampton ranch have taken many prizes.

A Standard Oil distributing plant is located at Artesia and the town has an ice plant. The Ealy Building was erected last year and houses several shops. Seven subdivisions were opened near the town, where selling of homesites has been active.

CLEARWATER

Clearwater and Hynes are virtually one town, as the main streets of the two are one, and the building activity of the last year has brought them close together. These towns lie on the highway between Los Angeles and Long Beach and situated as they are, ten miles from Los Angeles and eight from Long Beach, lands in this section have considerable value. At a recent election the boundaries of Long Beach were extended as far as Lincoln street in the town of Hynes.

The most important block built during the last year was one of seven stores and postoffice in the Hynes section. These buildings have just been completed at a cost of $18,000. The First National Bank has been remodeled at a cost of $14,000, and another block of stores has been built adjoining this bank. Several other store buildings have also been added to these towns in the last year. In the Eureka Tract at Hynes twenty-five new homes being built by members of the Long Beach police force. In the Jones Tract ten new homes were built, and the Ocean Boulevard Tract boasts sixty homes recently built. A number of buildings erected by the Alpine Dairy are now owned were erected last year, five of these by the Mountain View Creamery of Long Beach.

EIGHT EAST SIDE HIGHWAY PROJECTS ARE INDORSED

Industrial Thoroughfare Plans Are Approved by Communities and District Organization

Eight major highway projects for the east side of Los Angeles, designed to relieve traffic congestion and bring the entire area closer to the center of the city, were indorsed at a joint meeting yesterday of the East Side Organization, Inc., and accredited representatives of ten near-by interested communities.

Francis Bates, chief engineer of the east side body, presented the proposals in a report covering his work for the past several months in surveying needed improvements and in the 100 square miles of territory extending from Alameda street on the west, Valley Boulevard and Alhambra on the north, Whittier on the east and Huntington Park on the south.

Immediate circulation of petitions in the districts involved is planned, according to Leslie R. Saunders, executive secretary of the East Side Oorganization, Inc. The method of procedure on each of the eight proposals will be determined at the meeting of the organization on Friday of this week.

TOWNS JOINED

A total of 56.4 miles of highway construction is included in the eight proposals. The communities represented at the meeting yesterday were: Belvedere, Belvedere Gardens, Downey, Hollenbeck Heights, Huntington Park, Maywood, Montebello, Pico, Rivera and Whittier. The projects in detail follow:

(1.) Southerly extension of Wilson avenue from Garvey Road, Monterey Park, to a connection with Michigan avenue, approximately two miles north of Clearwater. Total length, 10.2 miles.

WIDEN MINES AVENUE

(3.) Opening and widening of Mines avenue (Ninth-street boulevard) easterly from Los Angeles city limits at Indiana street to a connection with Whittier Boulevard at Pico. Total length, 6.3 miles.

(4.) Opening and widening a new route connecting Center street, Montebello, with King Lane and King Road, southwesterday of Whittier. This project, starting from Project No. 1, as outlined above, some 3300 feet southerly of Union Pacific Railroad, extends easterly to a connection with Whittier Boulevard at King Road. Total length 7.4 miles.

(5.) Opening and widening of an additional traffic artery to be known as Beverly Boulevard. This project connects with a similar project coming to East Side Organization territory from western Los Angeles. Easterly from Boyle avenue and Fourth street the route is along Fourth street, Third street and Beverly Boulevard (formerly Dewey street,) Montebello connecting with Lemon street, Whittier. Length from Boyle avenue and Fourth street is 10.1 miles.

EL SERENO STREET

(6.) El Sereno-Marianna street project, connecting Huntington Drive (at Bairdstown) with Brooklyn avenue and Pasadena avenue on the south in Belvedere, also included in the poject is .4 mile construction to Valley Boulevard, southeasterly of the Southern Pacific Railroad. Total length 4.4 miles.

(7.) Ramona Boulevard-Lorena street project, connecting Downey Road on the south with project No. 6 as outlined above, at Marianna and Fowler street. Total length 3.9 miles.

(8.) Manchester avenue extension easterly. This projcet, starting at Manchester avenue and Harbor Boulevard, extends easterly along Lincoln avenue, Southgate; is northerly over the Southern Pacific Railroad at the River School Road, Downey, and then southeasterly parallel with the Southern Pacific. The route as described above is the portion lying within East Side Organization territory of a much larger project. The latter contemplates a through-traffic artery from Playa Del Ray into Orange county. The length from Truck Boulevard to Norwalk is 10.1 miles.

LAST YEAR GIN RECORD EXCEEDED

Mexicali Consul Reports Season Shows Great Gain Over 1922

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

MEXICALI, May 31.—Local gins report a total of 89,100 running bales ginned from August 1, 1923, to and including April 30, last, as against 56,045 bales for the corresponding period last year, Consul H. C. Von Struve reports. All the gins except one have closed for the season and there are only a few bales left to gin.

Declared exports at the Mexicali consulate for the season are 27,496 bales of 500 pounds each, compared with 50,189 bales for the corresponding period last year.

The records of the United States customshouse at Calexico show that during the present season there have been entered in transit to Mexico 55,582 bales of 500 pounds each. That figure is the most accurate obtainable for the cotton shipped from this district to other parts of Mexico, as all of it has to pass through the United States in transit. There are about 5000 bales left, practically all of which is destined for shipment to the United States.

As the reports from the gins are in running bales without regard to weight, the number of bales reported by them does not correspond exactly with the number of bales declared for export and for transit to Mexico plus the cotton which remains to be shipped.

Planting of the new crop is a little late but is proceeding satisfactorily, the total acreage for the coming season being estimated at 145,000 acres. The weather up to the present time has been somewhat cool but has now turned warm and the new crop is therefore expected to make rapid progress.

NATIONAL SPIRIT OF WEST GIVEN TRIBUTE

"You must not lose your national consciousness," John E. Edgerton, president of the National Manufacturers' Association, warns industrial men in the Commerce Journal. "We people back east have been prone to think of those living in the West as a restless sort of people, pioneers, adventurers seeking bread and wealth in a short time for the purpose of living easily. I have not found in the whole country a people who seemed to be more solid in their lives and thinking and who are striving more diligently to play their part in the affairs of the great national community than are the people of the Pacific Coast."

PICTURE RECORD STARTED

Los Angeles Industrial Structures Photographed by Chamber for Unique Service

With a view to helping residents of Los Angeles get acquainted with the industrial side of the city and thus revise the prevailing opinion that Los Angeles is merely a tourist resort, the industrial department of the Chamber of Commerce is making a photographic record of local manufacturing plants.

"Los Angeles factories represent a total capital investment of approximately $750,000,000, while the annual pay roll exceeds $250,000,000," points out A. G. Arnoll, manager of the industrial department. "This should prove conclusively that Los Angeles is a manufacturing center."

VISIT MADE

Last week A. W. Poole of the industrial department of the chamber, and a photographer, visited the new plants of the Normany Products Company, the Pacific Faucet Company and the Commercial Fixture Company.

The Normany Products Company has just completed its new factory at 6511-25 McKinley avenue, in the industrial district near the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company's plant. It has a floor space of 30,000 square feet, and turns out an average of four carloads weekly of Glo-Co, a nonstaining hair gloss and dress preparation which has a national market through the retail drug and barber shop trade. The preparation was perfected by Robert H. Cromwell, president and general manager of the firm.

MANY EMPLOYED

The Pacific Faucet Manufacturing Company's new plant at 940 East Sixtieth street, has a floor space of 16,200 square feet and another addition already has become necessary. This company, which came here from Cleveland, O., manufactures faucets and plumbers' supplies. It employs about 100 skilled mechanics and has a capital investment in plant and equipment, of approximately $100,000.

The Commercial Fixture Company is now moving into its new shops at Sixtieth street and Slauson avenue. Its factory has a floor space of 65,000 square feet, employs 200 men and represents a capital of approximately $200,000. It specializes in store, bank and office fixtures and its new works is equipped with the very latest machinery.

WOODLAKE TO HAVE NEW PACKING-HOUSE

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

WOODLAKE, May 31.—Woodlake is to have a new green-fruit packing-house, according to action of representatives of the Associated Fruit Company in recent session here. The house will be located on one of three sites under consideration just west of town on the Visalia Electric Railroad.

The company has sufficient acreage signed to assure at least 100 cars of fruit for shipment this season.

TRACT SOLD FOR TEXTILE STRUCTURE

San Dimas Organization to Develop Small City With Factory

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

SAN DIMAS, May 31.—The California-Pacific Textiles, Inc., a textile factory which gives promise of developing into one of the greatest industries in Southern California, has purchased nearly five acres of land between San Dimas and La Verne, just back of Bonita Union High School, at a reported consideration of approximately $200,000, it was made known today. Sale of the land was reported by the San Dimas Real Estate Company, which acted as agent in the transactions.

It is the plan of the concern to lay out an industrial city of its own on the land, building and selling houses to its employees, laying out a business section and otherwise creating a modern city. The first unit of the factory will be located on a ten-acre tract of land between the Santa Fe and Southern Pacific railroads.

Engineers are expected on the ground within a week to lay out the site of the first unit. The concern is completely financed, it is said.

BRICK MEN TO MEET IN ANGEL CITY

American Ceramic Society Delegates Due to Gather Here in August

The American Ceramic Society will hold its annual summer meeting in Los Angeles this year, from August 7 to 11, with more than 200 delegates from all parts of the United States in attendance, according to an announcement yesterday by Howard Frost, president of the Los Angeles Pressed Brick Company.

Mr. Frost is on the entertainment committee for Los Angeles.

The delegates will leave New York July 31 on a special train and will come west through the Canadian Rockies. En route down the Pacific Coast, the delegates will be joined by brick and terra cotta men in Washington, Oregon and California.

WALL STREET IS TRADE WAY

Nine Buildings Added in Last Seven Months

Western Radio, Inc., Will Have Structure

The Smack Company Leases New Quarters

Wall street is becoming one of Los Angeles' foremost wholesale trade streets, according to Robert L. McCourt, vice-president of the W. Ross Campbell Company, business property brokers, who presents statistics which show that the development that has taken place along that thoroughfare between Eighth street and Pico street during the past seven months has included the erection of nine new buildings, most of which will be occupied by wholesale firms. The value of these new buildings is in excess of $1,000,000.

FRANK H. COLE BUYER

Simultaneous with the announcement that the Campbell Company has made the sale of property located at 1224 South Wall street, with Frank H. Cole as the buyer, it has been made known that Mr. Cole will erect a one-story Class C building on the property, which has been leased to Western Radio, Inc., of 637 South Hope street. The transaction involves a financial consideration of nearly $90,000.

The new building will be completed in a short time and will be occupied by the Western Radio as soon as possible. The entire premises will be occupied by the lessees who handle a complete line of tubes, batteries, and general radio supplies. Western Radio, Inc., is the Southern California distributor for many of the foremost radio manufacturing concerns. C. E. Johnson is president of the company. D. A. Hollbrock of the W. Ross Campbell industrial department conducted all negotiations for both the sale and leasing of the property.

BUSINESS DEMAND

Through D. A. Hollbrook of the W. Ross Campbell Company, industrial department, the property located at 513 South Hewitt street was leased to The Smack Company of California, manufacturers of Smack, automatic dispensers throughout the city.

The lessees, due to increased business, found the move into the new quarters necessary as this location gives them a total of 3280 square feet for manufacturing purposes. C. F. Bollinger was the lessor and Ben C. Rich represented the lessees.

Mill and Mine Supply Firm in New Structure

Due to increasing business and a fire recently at their old business location at 310 East Third street, the Pacific Mill and Mine Supply Companv has leased a new building at 1122 and 1124 Santa Fe avenue. V. V. Sanderson represented the lessor, the Bixby Estate. The negotiations were reported by Metcalf and Ryan.

Metcalf and Ryan also announce leasing of space at 302 Emil Brown Building at Ninth and Santee streets to Betty Jo Frocks. Topper, Roth and Newbo were the lessors.

STATE LEADER IN VEGETABLE TRADE

California is one of the great vegetable-producing States of the country in point of acreage and production, according to Thomas O'Neil, president of the California Vegetable Union, in the Commerce Journal. Mr. O'Neil is of the opinion that its importance in these respects is greatly emphasized by the fact that by reason of our more favorable climatic conditions the State is the chief source of supply and in many instances the only source of supply of fresh vegetables during part of the year for all other sections of the United States as well as Canada.

Wanted for Lease

FASHION TYRANTS BEWARE

The Ohio Hairdressers' Association holds a cheer-up meeting at which it is predicted that bobbed hair will be "passe" in another year. And when this happens the girls will find the hairdressers ready to make the transformation from shorn locks to done-up tresses satisfactorily. A few strands of extra hair skillfully placed over the loose end will do the trick, they say. The hairdressers are indulging in a vain hope. Women have begun to kick the fashion tyrants in the face. What has happened to the long skirt has more recently happened to long hair. American women will never go back to either.—[Capper's Weekly.

A Truthful Answer

"Hubby," asked Mrs. Newlywed, sweetly, "what would you like for dinner today?"

Hubby, after giving this his careful consideration, made reply:

"Turtle soup, sweetbreads, broiled live lobster, romaine salad and apple pie."

"You know we can't afford all that," responded his dear little wife.

"Maybe not," was his rejoinder, "but you asked me what I'd like to have."—[Unidentified.

anufacturing of cement mixing d tile machines and other simr machinery under patents now d and to be acquired, will be ed out by the company, and goods will be made at the foun y and plant located at Atchison Santa Fe streets here.

As far as can be learned at the es of the company, the present s of the corporation include leasing of tile-making ma nes to responsible individuals or firms in sectional territories throughout the United States.

TILE UNIQUE

Roscoe declared that the type of hollow concrete building tile which is produced by the tile-making machines has created a huge demand, since it is recognized as one of the cheapest and best forms of construction material known to the building industry today. One of the greatest attractions of this form of construction is the fact that a man of moderate means can build his own home with the material, since the tile is tongued and grooved to make it interlocking, and can be laid with or without mortar.

The building of a house with this tile does not require the technical knowledge of a builder, it is said.

NUT BUTTER WORKS OPENS

Pacific Coast Division of Eastern Organization Starts Manufacturing Product

The Standard Nut Margarine Company of California, Ltd., which has just been organized, will operate here under patents and methods perfected by the company of the same name doing business in Indianapolis and Chicago.

The Indianapolis division of this concern was organized three years ago, and in that time has built up its business to such an extent that it sells one-third of the entire butter-substitute output of Indiana. The Chicago plant is less than one year old, and has been favored with a growth comparable to that in Indiana.

The one-story brick building at the southeast corner of Main and Thirtieth streets was leased to the new concern through the Frank Meline Company for business quarters. H. L. Lewis, manager of the realty firm's industrial properties department, handled all negotiations for the Standard Company, while H. M. Joy represented H. T. Love, the lessor.

Of the new organization, C. T. Payton is president and general manager and J. R. Elliot is secretary and treasurer. George Sonnich, the inventor of the methods and formula employed in the manufacture of this project, has been in Los Angeles for some time, aiding in the organization of the concern and the installation of the machinery.

The building leased by the company has been remodeled to meet its needs. A special hot room for preheating the materials used has been installed, together with a 35 horsepower tubular gas boiler, mixing tubs and other equipment.

The firm starts business in Los Angeles with an organization of twenty-four men and five trucks.

It will enlarge its force and equipment as occasion demands. The present unit affords a capacity of 10,000 pounds a day.

BUILDERS TO BEGIN WORK ON FACTORY

Santa Ana's Huge Glass Shops to be Rushed by Construction Crews

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

SANTA ANA, May 31.—Construction work is expected to begin at Santa Ana's central industrial area Monday on the first units of the $400,000 plant of the Standard American Glass Manufacturing Company, which when completed will be the largest factory producing window glass west of the Mississippi River.

The first carload of a $20,000 shipment of lumber was unloaded at Los Angeles Harbor this week, and railway spurs have been laid to the scene of building operations here. Twenty-five cars of lumber will complete the consignment.

When the first unit is completed the company expects to place 200 men on the pay roll. Later, when operations are in full order, more than 800 men will be employed, according to present plans.

The Dixon Glass Company of Los Angeles is understood to be financing the Santa Ana company. Its directors have purchased twenty-five acres in the industrial area and expect to operate a plate-glass factory in conjunction with the larger plant, the smaller unit also to be located on the site purchased in Santa Ana.

SALES AGENT FOR HOISTS APPOINTED

A. L. Dixon, manufacturers' agent, has been appointed agent for Shepard Electric Crane and Hoist Company's "liftabouts," according to an announcement yesterday by Hal W. Thorne, manager of the industrial department of the Union Iron Works of Los Angeles. The Union Iron Works is representative in the Southwest territory for the Shepard electric cranes, hoists and equipment.

Increased Phone Lines at Visalia Held Favorable

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

VISALIA, May 31.—Healthy conditions for the Visalia district are indicated in general development work of the community by the growth of the local branch of the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company.

E. O. Chandler, local manager, has announced that only twelve more connections are needed to bring the total for Visalia to 2200. The Visalia exchange serves a territory of about 12,000 people and one phone to each six persons is considered a showing seldom equalled by larger communities.

One hundred new phone connections have been reported during the past six months. The company is now receiving material for extension of phone wires and cable connecting service to the new Hyde Vista tract and to other tracts recently opened in the southwestern section of the city. A crew of workmen is expected here within a short time to carry on this improvement which will cost about $5000, according to Mr. Chandler.

PORTERVILLE SCHOOL BOYS BUILD HOUSE

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

PORTERVILLE, May 31.—Venturing into a new field this season, students of the farm mechanics and carpentry classes of Porterville Union High School have gained considerable practical experience through erection of a modern bungalow during regular class periods. The Porterville Improvement Club, Woman's Civic and Departmental organization, supplied material for this residence and will sell it later, adding to their own clubhouse fund to apply against present indebtedness for their attractive building.

UNION IRON WORKS EXPANDS

The phenomenal increase in industrial development in Southern California is reflected in the announcement yesterday of H. G. Miller, president of the Union Iron Works of Los Angeles, that a $50,000 expansion program for the Union Iron Works plant in Vernon will be put into effect at once.

A new unit to the administration building to house the industrial department will cost approximately $10,000; there will be an addition of fifty feet to the main shop buildings and an extension of seventy-five feet to the craneways; the installation of a new box girder type seven and a half-ton Shepard electric crane, a crane assembly building 45 by 70 and a new building for the stores department 28 by 60, and an auto repair shop are included in the expansion program.

The expansion program, the Union Iron Works announced yesterday, is due entirely to the large volume of business being handled by its industrial department.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

HUNTINGTON PARK, May 31. Another industry, the Beck Fine Arts Studio, has been added to the manufacturing plants of Huntington Park. The new concern will manufacture art stone trimmings. Other products are to be mantels, garden furniture, etc.

RECORD SHIPMENT OF MULCH PAPER AT DOCK

LOS ANGELES FIRM SENDING HUGE CONSIGNMENT TO HAWAIIAN ISLANDS

The largest shipment of roofing paper ever to be exported from Los Angeles Harbor was unloaded yesterday on the docks for shipment abroad the steamer Calawaii, which sails June 7. The shipment is being sent by the Pioneer Paper Company of Los Angeles to the Hawaiian Islands for use as mulch paper to cover the pineapple and sugar-cane fields. It is composed of 22,500,000 square feet.

The mulch paper is laid on the fields and the pineapple and sugar-cane plants are set into notches cut in the sides. The process of mulching with roofing paper was invented by Charles F. Eckart, director of the experiment station of the Hawaiian Sugar Planters' Association, and is declared to increase production on these crops as high of 50 per cent, due to its moisture and temperature-conserving qualities.

SANTA ANA CIGAR FIRM OPERATING

Warehouse Space Leased for Twenty Years; Force at Work

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

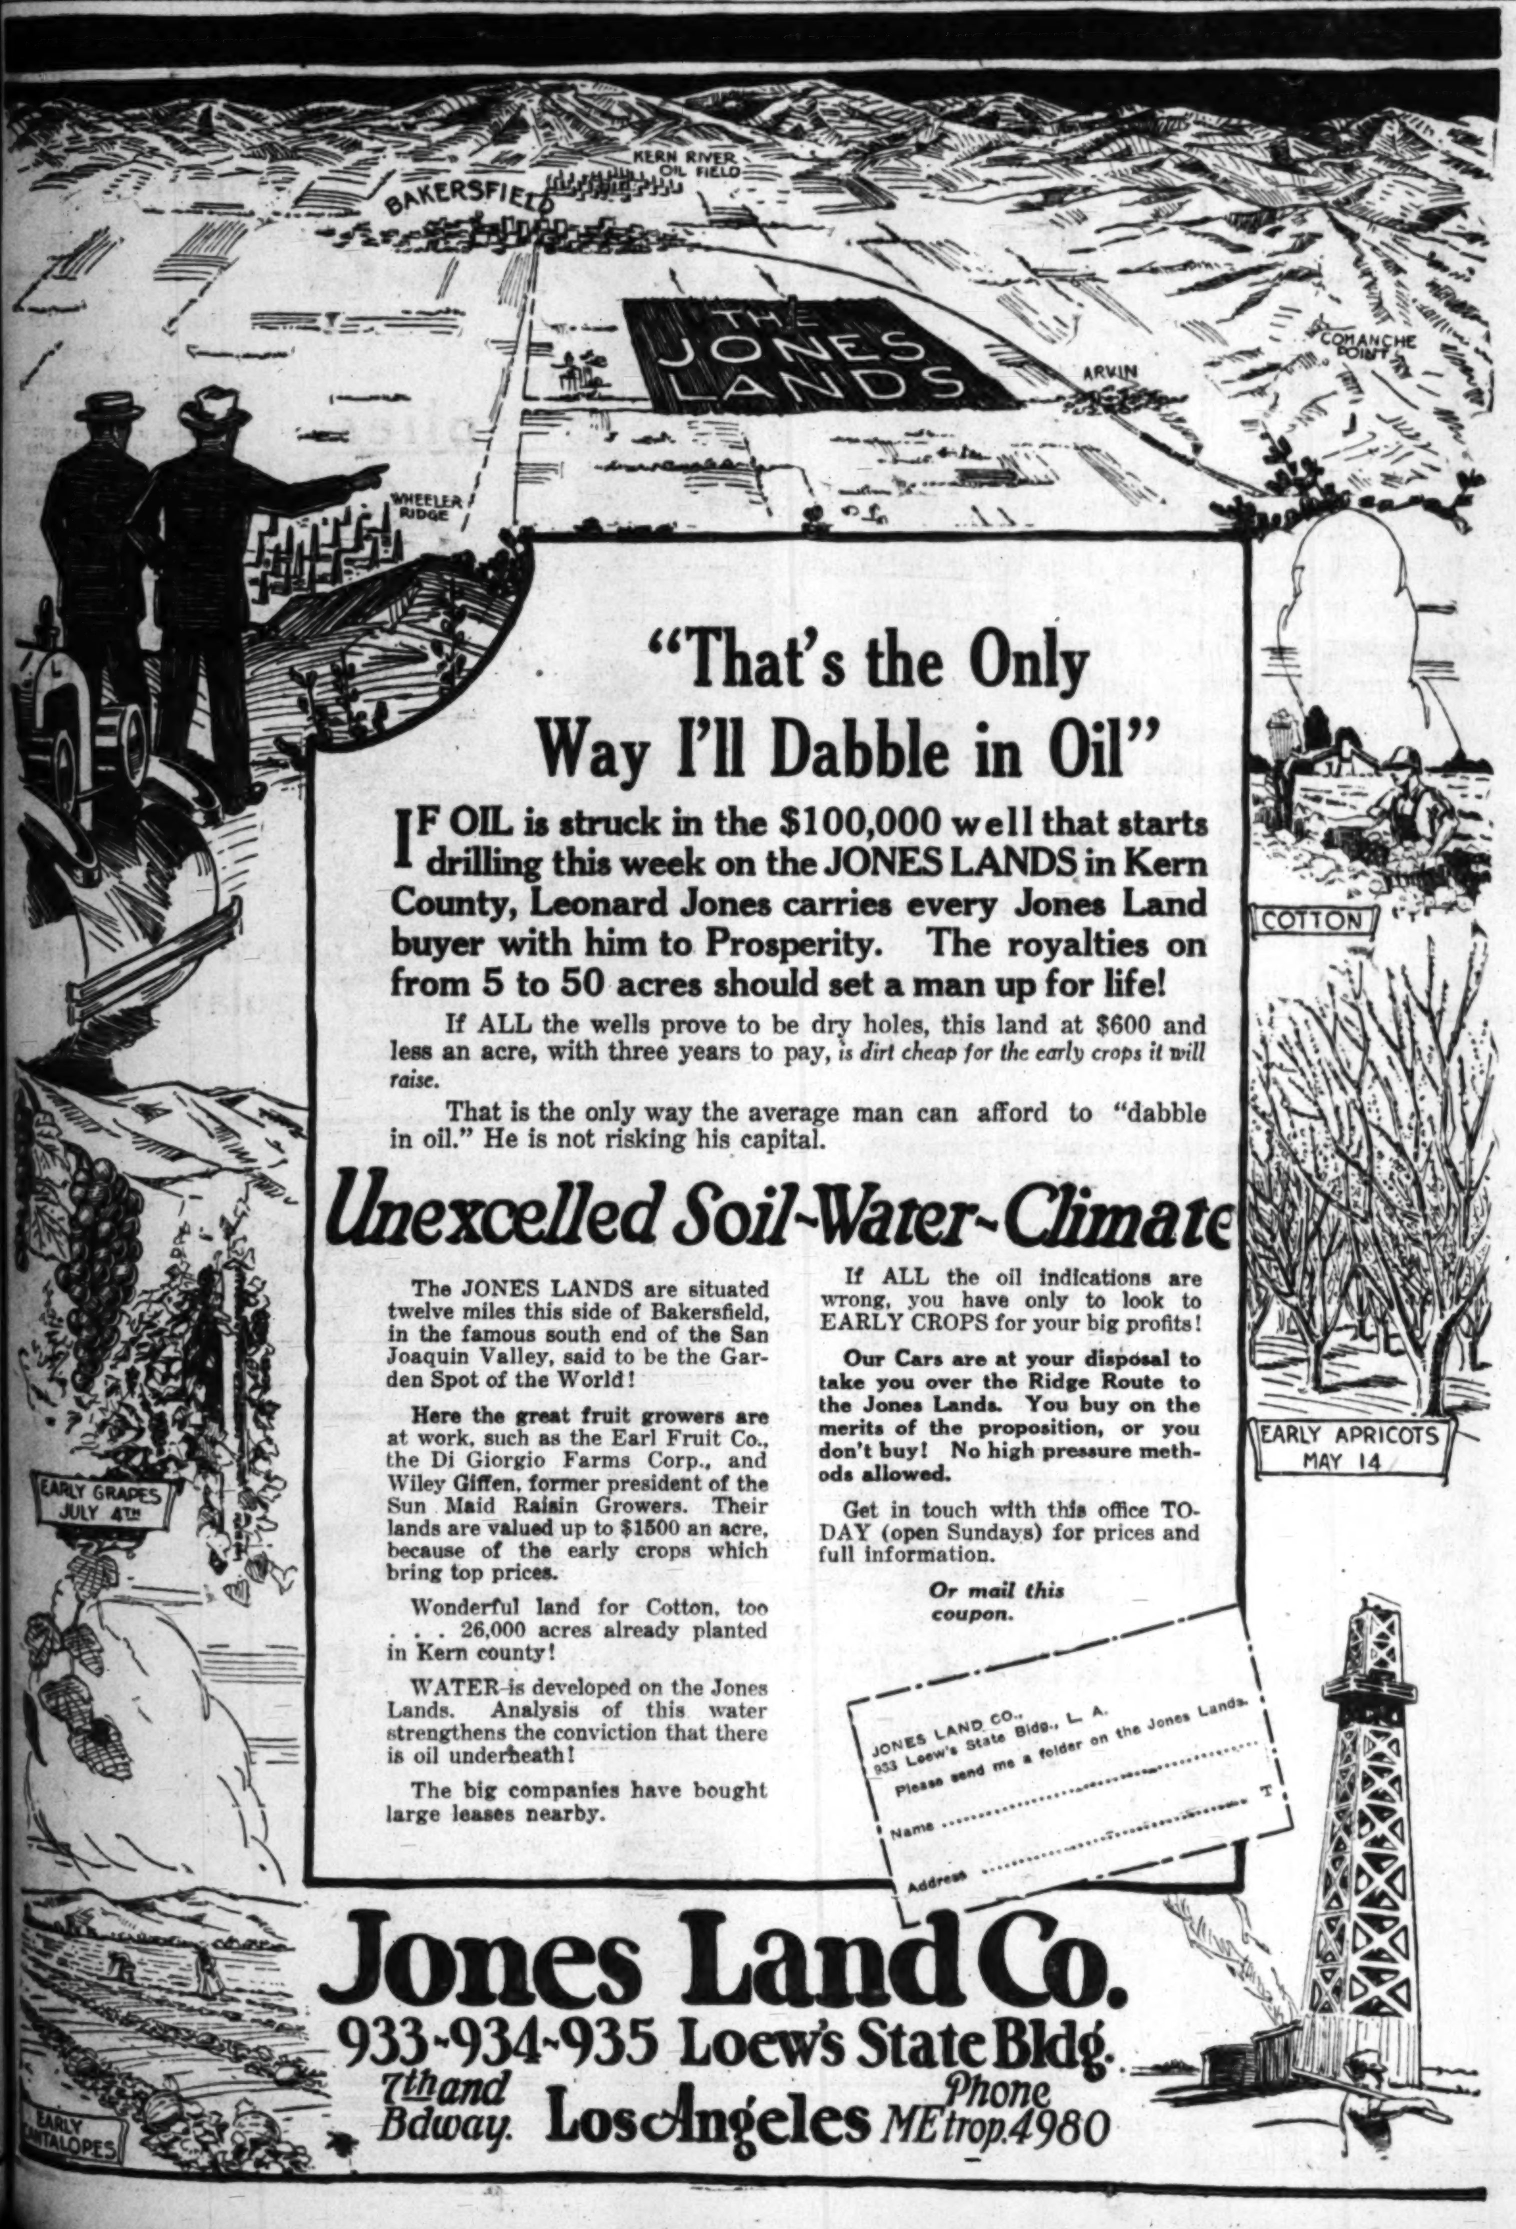
SANTA ANA, May 31.—Santa Ana has a cigar factory which in a short time will employ 100 persons and which will have a capacity of 50,000 cigars a day, its owners, Franklin R. Pitner and C. B. Webber, announced today. The company has obtained a twenty-year lease on the entire second floor and part of the basement in the warehouse of the Roehm-Sylvester Company at East Fourth street and the Santa Fe tracks.

The new industry is the fifth that has established its enterprise in Santa Ana within the past two months, the combined pay rolls of which, when operating at full capacity, will include 1500 persons.

"Since we have been established in Santa Ana," Webber said, "we have made the discovery that the climate here moistens and softens the dry tobacco leaves so that they may be worked much easier than in many other localities."

The firm began operations with twenty-five employees this week, bringing five families to complete its force. When additional equipment is placed more than 100 employees will be added, Webber declared.

A sticky substance obtained from garlic by a special process is said to rival glue in adhesive qualities.



"That's the Only Way I'll Dabble in Oil"

IF OIL is struck in the $100,000 well that starts drilling this week on the JONES LANDS in Kern County, Leonard Jones carries every Jones Land buyer with him to Prosperity. The royalties on from 5 to 50 acres should set a man up for life!

If ALL the wells prove to be dry holes, this land at $600 and less an acre, with three years to pay, is dirt cheap for the early crops it will raise.

That is the only way the average man can afford to "dabble in oil." He is not risking his capital.

Unexcelled Soil~Water~Climate

The JONES LANDS are situated twelve miles this side of Bakersfield, in the famous south end of the San Joaquin Valley, said to be the Garden Spot of the World!

Here the great fruit growers are at work, such as the Earl Fruit Co., the Di Giorgio Farms Corp., and Wiley Giffen, former president of the Sun Maid Raisin Growers. Their lands are valued up to $1500 an acre, because of the early crops which bring top prices.

Wonderful land for Cotton, too . . . 26,000 acres already planted in Kern county!

WATER is developed on the Jones Lands. Analysis of this water strengthens the conviction that there is oil underneath!

The big companies have bought large leases nearby.

If ALL the oil indications are wrong, you have only to look to EARLY CROPS for your big profits!

Our Cars are at your disposal to take you over the Ridge Route to the Jones Lands. You buy on the merits of the proposition, or you don't buy! No high pressure methods allowed.

Get in touch with this office TODAY (open Sundays) for prices and full information.

THIS TYPICAL PALOS VERDES OUTLOOK IS DUPLICATED IN THE VIEW FROM THE CAPPUCCINO CONVENT OVERLOOKING THE CITY OF AMALFI—IN THE RIVIERA.

The Riviera of America

Where Beauty Wins Over Commercialism

SUPPOSING a Fairy Godmother suddenly appeared on your doorstep and offered to take you to the Riviera—in the south of France—for the day. Would you go? Of course you would. The Riviera has always stood in your mind as the very finest residential district in the world.

But today the good offices of Fairy Godmothers are not needed. The Riviera is here—in Southern California—just a few miles from your home. Wonderful!

In location, coast line, climate, and in its exact position on the Pacific, Palos Verdes is a physical duplicate of the French Riviera overlooking the city of Nice. Study the small illustration opposite.

Why is it that the world's finest residential communities—such places as the Riviera—Riverside Drive, New York—St Francis Wood, San Francisco—Montecito, Santa Barbara—have been able to retain their natural beauty in spite of growth and expansion?

It is because they have done what Palos Verdes is doing. They have made artistic development a thing of greater importance than mere commercial growth.

Scenery, location, a beautiful coast line, are Nature's own gifts. It is left to those who plan and build and live in such places to retain beauty or to destroy it. To make it the place of artistic homes, gardens, parks or give it over to unsightly shacks, beach buildings and so called amusement grounds—common to many of our beach cities.

Palos Verdes will always retain its naturally attractive features. Its Protective Restrictions will ensure a beautiful city—the logical centre of culture and refinement.

Already over 3000 men and women have purchased homesites on its terraced slopes, and will there enjoy life on a higher plane, in better health and greater happiness. Why do you delay your selection? Why not drive down today and get the true spirit of Palos Verdes. See what is being done. Compare the prices. See what you get for what you pay.

Palos Verdes prices are low—from $2000 to $6000 and up.

View from Cap Mont Baron, in the French Riviera, overlooking the city of Nice on Baie des Anges—the Mediterranean, with the foothills of the Alps in the background. This is an almost exact replica of the view from Monte Malaga, on Palos Verdes, overlooking Redondo, the Pacific and the Santa Monica Mountains in the distance.

WELL, FOLKS, HERE I AM AGAIN WITH ANOTHER GOOD BUY.

I have been successful in obtaining one good buy each week for several weeks and I have sold them quick.
Now I have one that is built like the rock of Gibraltar and stands out like a Beacon Light. It's a two-story stucco, tile roof, on a corner 75x180. Reception hall, large living-room, sun-room, breakfast-room, dining-room, butler's pantry, kitchen and maid's quarters on the first floor. Good basement, unit heating system electrically controlled. Built for a home, not for speculation. However, the ridiculous price asked makes it a wonderful speculation, as well as a permanent home.
Drive to 301 S. Lucerne. This home will be opened for inspection from 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. Do not hesitate to inspect this property, as the present owner is out of the city and you will find my representative there to extend you the usual CHELEW & HOIT courtesy. Call MR. O'CONNELL.

WAR GAS CURES COLDS

Next winter the American public may be buying little capsules of chlorine gas, the gas formerly used on the battlefield, and breaking the capsules and inhaling the fumes. These fumes are found to have a wonderfully curative effect on colds and influenza, bronchitis and whooping cough. In the small per cent of cases not immediately cured, relief is quick. Many United States Senators and Representatives have received this treatment under direction of Lieut.-Col. H. L. Gilchrist of the Army Medical Corps attached to the Chemical Warfare Department. The treatment is simple and the cost less than 6 cents a person. War Department experts believe it only a question of time until the chlorine gas treatment will be used in hospitals, theaters, schools and churches, and other places where large bodies of persons congregate, as an ordinary precaution against the spreading of respiratory diseases. Recently distemper broke out in virulent form among the artillery horses at Fort Hoyle, Md. Three days' treatment of an hour each with chlorine gas effected a complete cure. —[Capper's Weekly.

CRIME LAID TO EMOTION MISGUIDED

"Drama" Editor Tells City Club of Need for Control of Natural Impulses

"Crime is the expression of men and women whose emotional natures have not been properly trained," declared Theodore Hinckley, editor of The Drama and a director of the National Drama League, in an address yesterday before the City Club.

Agreeing with leaders in the field of psycho-analysis, who contend that the great need of mankind is the intelligent direction rather than the suppression of the emotional nature, Prof. Hinckley asserted that a highly emotionalized person, controlled by a constructive will, is society's greatest asset.

"It is the ideals of a nation that determine its worth to civilization, and ideals are developed through the expression of emotion, properly controlled," said the speaker, and in this connection he paid tribute to the system of education in Southern California, which includes the teaching of the dramatic art and the maintenance of a department of psychology.

"It is good to know that since the war men are no longer ashamed of their emotions, including the love of art," continued Prof Hinckley. "I would be glad to see the Rotarians, the Kiwanians and members of other intellectual clubs and societies give more attention to art.

"I suggest that Los Angeles set aside a certain sum for revenues received from taxation for the purpose of fostering the arts. If you want to attract money-spenders and at the same time broaden the spiritual, moral and esthetic consciousness of your citizens, that is one way to do it."

The program for the City Club for next week is as follows: Tomorrow evening, at the Men's Open Forum, Seward C. Simmons will discuss "British Labor." Wednesday at noon, Dr. Edward T. Gevine will be the speaker. Friday at noon there will be a community sing, featuring the Whitney Boys' Chorus. Friday evening A. Hannum will speak on "The Making of Oriental Rugs," while the speaker at next Saturday's luncheon will be Rev. G. B. Oxnam, whose subject will be "The Church and War."

Dog Is Poisoned Again as Police Hunt Miscreant

Lincoln Heights police yesterday ordered a search made of the district immediately surrounding the home of Dr. Alvin Hamer of Eagle Rock to ascertain if possible the identity of persons who have been strewing the neighborhood with bits of poisoned bread.

Bimbo, Dr. Hamer's dog, which was poisoned last Wednesday was poisoned again yesterday morning, the family asserts. The dog was hurriedly taken to a veterinarian and probably will recover.

Jimmy Joe Hamer, young son of Dr. Hamer, who while playing on the lawn last week found a piece of the poisoned foodstuffs, is being guarded in the house.

The search of the neighborhood is under the direction of Capt. William B. White of the Lincoln Heights Police Station.

EXTRADITION FAULTY

Kentucky Suspect Released on Writ of Habeas Corpus

Rush Meadows, asserted to have been indicted by the grand jury of Fayette county, Kentucky, for the alleged conversion of corporation funds to his own use, was released from the County Jail yesterday on a writ of habeas corpus issued by Judge Burks. Meadows was asserted to have appropriated to his own use a large sum of money of the Kentucky Co-operative Coal Company.

The writ was granted on the ground that extradition papers sent to Gov. Richardson by the Governor of Kentucky were faultily drawn.

HOME IS ROBBED OF FURS AND JEWELRY

Louis M. Swift, 5173 Hollywood Boulevard, reported to Hollywood police early yesterday that some one had entered her apartment by using a pass-key and carried away jewelry and furs valued at more than $2000. Included in plunder was a diamond pin valued at $1000, an amethyst pin valued at $600 and an amethyst ring worth more than $200. An investigation was started by Hollywood detectives. A report also was filed with the Hollywood police by Burt E. De Quine of 530 North Gardner street of the robbery of his home Friday night. Jewelry valued at $200 was taken.

LIVE-STOCK MARKET AT VARIOUS CENTERS

[Furnished by Federal-State Live-Stock Market News Service, 103 Exchange Building, Stockyards.]

Weekly Summary

CATTLE—The week's receipts have been of fairly liberal volume, a slight increase being noted from the previous week. Bulk end of the run has consisted of grass steers and she stock, lacking finish, and only a limited showing of good fed steers and she stock. The overabundance of one grade prevented packers from having a good assortment in their coolers and this has resulted in an uneven trend in values. Buyers' interest centered on the good fed steers and she stock that arrived and these kinds found an active broad demand with prices developing a touch of strength, while medium and common steers and she stock were on a sliding scale with trend to prices unmistakably lower, decline for the week being quoted as 25@50c.

Two trains of Imperial Valley fed steers arrived, one on last Sunday, these steers averaging from 1013 to 1020 pounds, at a spread of 8.65@9.00, while on Wednesday bulk of the Imperial steers 979 to 1100 pounds clearing from 8.85@9.10, with a two-load lot of fed Mexican offerings from Imperial Valley, average 913 pounds, noted at 7.50. A few loads of Northern California fed steers, sold from 7.75@8.25, but the bulk of the steers have been grassers of medium and common quality and condition and these had to clear from 6.25@7.00, a few well conditioned loads of steers noted upward to 7.50, with the extreme top at the close of the week on range steers noted at 8.25.

Much the same conditions have prevailed in the market for cows and heifers as for steers, the good grade showing strength with weakness on other grades. Extreme top for the week on load lots of cows reached 6.75, this figure paid for a load of fed Northern California cows average 1123 pounds, while 6.25@6.40 took in good cows from the Imperial Valley, with the bulk of the grassers, including dairy offerings, noted from 4.40@6.00, while canners and cutters, mostly from starvation areas, have cleared from 2.00@3.75. Bull prices show but little change, bulk bolognas 4.25@5.00, a few canner bulls on down to 2.50 with a few beef bulls noted upward to 5.25.

CALVES—Increased receipts of calves proved a bearish factor and price declines featured throughout the week, break being quoted as 1.00@2.00. Towards the close of the week good milk calves, 170 to 220 pounds, sold from 7.50@8.50, with practical top 9.00, while medium calves and strong weights moved largely from 6.00@7.50, with commons down to 5.00 and under.

HOGS—An unequal distribution of hog supplies throughout the week tended to make the deal somewhat uneven. On Friday and Saturday of this week prices developed weakness, decline from a week ago being 10@25c. A spread of 7.90@8.65 took in desirable butchers, while packing sows have held generally steady throughout the period, quoted 6.00@7.00.

SHEEP—Compared with the close of last week there is not a great deal of change noted in the market for sheep or lambs. Run at the yards has shown expansion, but with some improvement both in local dressed lambs prices and a firm tone in the eastern trade outlet has benefitted. General quality of the supply has been of medium to good quality and condition but there has been a scarcity of the choice kinds, or the grade suitable for eastern shipments. A spread of 10.50@11.50 has taken in lambs suitable for eastern shipments, average from 67 to 78 pounds, while medium lambs for local trade, averages from 63 to 88 pounds, ranged from 9.00@10.00, with common lambs mostly 8.00@8.50. A part deck shipment of yearlings, average 90 pounds, cleared at 8.00, while wooled ewes in odd lots have sold from 5.50@6.25, with culls downward to 2.50.

Ashes of Loved Ones Cast From Plane Over Sea

By a "Times" Staff Correspondent

LONG BEACH, May 31.—Ashes of two men were scattered to the winds of the ocean several miles off the Long Beach shore yesterday from an airplane, it was disclosed here today. The ashes were those of C. Y. Delay of Venice, and his son, B. H. Delay, Venice aviator, who was killed in an airplane accident at Santa Monica on July 4, 1923. The father died several months ago.

Mrs. C. Y. Delay, widow and mother of the dead men, obtaining an airplane from the Daugherty aviation field here and with Earl Daugherty, a close friend of the aviator as the pilot, put out to sea to a point well south of Santa Catalina Island where the ashes of her loved ones were scattered on the wind.

HIGH-SCHOOL GIRLS AGAINST UNIFORMS

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE]

REDLANDS, May 31.—The girls of Redlands High School will not wear the uniform dress of white middy blouses and blue wool skirts.

This was decided at the election held today at which the vote was 125 for the uniform dress and 105 against it. A large number of the girls in three lower classes did not vote and none of the senior girls voted on the question.

The dress will not be worn as there was not a majority of two-thirds of the girls in favor of it. The question came to a vote because of an insistent demand from some of the students and also from the High School Parent-Teacher Association.

The Parent-Teacher Association sent a letter to the mothers of all the girls in the high school urging them to favor the dress because it makes for equality, democracy and economy and would promote better scholarship and a greater expression of personality.

BURGLARY IS HABIT OF FRESNO MAN

Police Trap Old Offender at Liberty on Parole from State Prison

FRESNO, May 3.—Burglary of Fresno homes, in the opinion of police, is decidedly to the liking of Felix Liere, now in jail on a burglary charge. He attracted police attention first November 12, 1922 when officers were summoned to the home of R. Thomas Hughes, 54 Kearney, where he was being held at bay with a stick of firewood.

Early yesterday morning, Sergt. F. G. Boutain and Patrol Driver D. Rennix found Liere in a garage in the rear of the home of E. P. Hoeppner, 301 Roosevelt avenue. He was stealing eggs when the officers captured him while they were seeking a man who had tried a few minutes previously to enter the home of C. W. Bingham, 267 Ferger.

Liere maintained that his family was starving and he was seeking to provide food for them. Search of his home disclosed the presence there of an automobile pump and a paint brush, stolen from Hoeppner's garage on the night of the 26th inst.

He was found guilty of burglary of the Hughes home, once the mecca of local burglars, and sentenced to an indeterminate sentence in San Quentin. On March 14, he told Detective Sergeant E. A. Nichols yesterday, he was paroled from the State institution and returned to Fresno a few days ago after he had worked several days on the Miller and Lux ranch near Los Banos.

Local officers communicated yesterday news of the arrest of Liere to State prison board officials in the belief that his parole would be revoked and the county spared the expense of trying him for burglary.

CONVICT DOPESTER

FRESNO, May 31. — Wong Ju, narcotic law violator, was sentenced to two and a half years in the McNeil's Island prison by Judge Benjamin F. Bledsoe. He had pleaded guilty to indictments against him charging violation of the Harrison Narcotic Act several days ago, but denied any cocaine had been found. Morphine, to which he is an addict, was all the officers seized, he averred.

Sentence of Wong Ju was delayed until arrival here yesterday of James E. Brown, Federal narcotic agent, who arrested Wong Ju. The officer assured the court that Wong Ju had tried to throw away both kinds of narcotics when the officer broke into his room on G street two years ago.

SANTA MONICA, May 31.—G. M. Halberson, 1026 Arlington avenue, drove his automobile into a telephone post early this morning while in an asserted intoxicated condition. The crash occurred at the corner of Seaside and Ocean avenues. When arrested by local motorcycle officers, Halbertson is said to have been in such a condition that he could not speak his name. He is being held in the City Jail under $250 bond.

PRISONER GAINS FREEDOM

FRESNO, May 31. — George Young, a prisoner in the County Jail since last New Year's Eve, was released on his own recognizance yesterday by Judge Benjamin F. Bledsoe to await retrial of liquor law charges against him at the November term of court. Trial of the case against Young, and his wife, Rebecca Young, recently resulted in a jury disagreement.

FAVORABLE REPORT OF MINE WORK

Progress on Famous Rand Properties Shows Activity of Workers

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

BAKERSFIELD, May 31.—For the week ending May 25, General Manager Charles S. Moroney of the California Rand Silver Incorporated reports that development work included: Drifts, 136 feet; raises, 121; winzes, fifteen; crosscuts, ninety-three, and No. 6 shaft, twenty-four feet, making a total advancement of 389 feet.

The contract for sinking No. 6 shaft will be completed June 1, says the report for the week. Development work in this portion of the mine will be resumed on that date. Water is receding in No. 2 shaft, presumably being drained by No. 6 as water volume increases in this shaft as depth is attained.

The fourteen cross-cut continues in hard formation. Work will be stopped in this heading on June 1, the report also states. Mill continues to handle about 220 tons daily and concentrate shipments are being made at regular intervals.

There is considerable other development in the silver zone. The Silver Glance has resumed sinking and is now down two sets of timbers below the sixth station. The Randsburg Associated mines shaft on the Silver Queen is down 350 feet. The Silver Queen's neighbor, the Flat Tire, is sinking in better formation and is now down 520 feet.

Two shifts of timber men are making good headway in lagging and timbering the Santa Fe shaft. It is expected the work will be completed June 10, when sinking from the 514-depth will proceed. The Silver Dell is nearing the 100-level. Bobbie Burns and workers in charge will continue sinking unless they should cut either a silver or gold showing in the shaft. Guy Dixon, doing assessment work near the Contact Rand shaft, believes that with a little depth, a vein cut into will make good ore.

TWO CHARGED WITH DISTURBING PEACE

By a "Times" Staff Correspondent

VENICE, May 31.—Samuel N. Roe, charged by his wife with disturbing the peace, entered a plea of not guilty at the preliminary hearing before Police Judge Willard and will be brought to trial June 3 to answer to the charge. Roe was arrested at his home, 14 Center street, the 20th inst., following an asserted quarrel between he and his wife.

M. Glick of Los Angeles also entered a plea of not guilty at the preliminary hearing this morning charged with disturbing the peace. His case will be heard June 4 before Judge Willard. Glick was arrested some days ago following an asserted disturbance in a local dance hall.

ALHAMBRA VICTIM OF MANY ROBBERIES

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE]

ALHAMBRA, May 31.—Four homes were entered by burglars here last night, several hundred dollars' worth of property being taken. Miscellaneous articles of jewelry comprised most of the stolen goods. Cutting the screen on rear windows was the favorite means for obtaining entrance. Several good fingerprints were secured by the police at one of the places visited by the robbers.

DETROIT, May 31.—The tomotive industry is on the of a foreign trade boom. is is the unanimous verdict those present, both Euro- and American delegates, the world motor transport gress which closed in De- it last week. Automotive ers from all parts of the ld returned home, express- astonishment at the uni- sal use of the automobile, pecially by the hordes of rking men. Foreign dele- tes declared they came to etroit skeptical over the re- rts they had heard and read cerning the number of orkers employed in the va- us automobile factories, the mendous daily output, effi- nt methods of manufacture d other details, but departed roughly convinced that the ries that had reached them re far from being exaggerated. Early Opening Is Forecast for Tioga Pass, World's Most Spectacular Mountain Road

Outdoor Franklin Puts First Car Over Lofty Highway for Third Time in Succession

A birdseye map by Charles H. Owens, Times Staff artist, showing the route traveled by a 1924 Buick from the Howard Automobile Company in again winning the honor of being the first car to reach the Yosemite by the eastern gateway. The stunt was pulled off successfully forty-five days earlier than usual, which indicates the announcement of an official opening of the road by Superintendent Lewis of Yosemite National Park probably one month earlier than in ordinary seasons, when the snowfall is heavier. Franklin's greatest difficulty in reaching Yosemite was encountered on the steep, crusted snow-drift grade to Tioga summit. It took him fifteen days to pilot the Buick four and one-half miles. It was a snow-bucking contest all the way.

CRATER LAKE RIM VISITED

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

MEDFORD (Or.) May 31. Snow in Crater Lake National Park has been at a minimum this year, and automobiles are already able to go up to the lake rim though the park will not officially open until July 1. There is snow to within a short distance of the government camp, or within three-quarters mile from the lodge, but motorists last Sunday found this passable and many drove to the government camp, hiking the rest of the way to the rim. With the official opening set so far ahead this will be the earliest that auto tourists have been able to reach Crater Lake.

National Park Season Is Ahead of Schedule

WYOMING PARK IS OPENED

Northern and Western Gates to Playground Are Swung Back Today

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

YELLOWSTONE PARK (Wyo.) May 31.—Yellowstone National Park, because of an early spring and light snowfall during the past winter, will open to automobilists two weeks earlier than usual. Motorists having their own camping equipment will be admitted to the park through the northern entrance at Gardiner, Mont., and the western entrance at West Yellowstone, Mont., on Sunday, June 1, and thereafter. The eastern or Cody (Wyo.) entrance will be opened on June 15, perhaps by the 12th, and the southern or Snake River entrance will be open on the 20th, perhaps a few days earlier.

On June 1, all of the Grand Loop Road, which touches the Grand Canyon of the Yellowstone, the geyser basins, Mammoth Hot Springs and Lake Yellowstone, will be open, except the Dunraven Pass section. Tower Falls will be accessible from Mammoth Hot Springs. Motorists coming in the north or west entrances with the expectation of going out the east or south gateways should plan to camp in the park until these entrances open about the middle of June.

All stores and gasoline stations will be open June 1, and the Yellowstone Park Camps

FIRST OVER TIOGA PASS

Outdoor Franklin for Third Successive Year Pilots First Car of Year Through Yosemite Gateway

That the famous Tioga Pass, the world's most spectacular mountain highway, will be open for travel into the Yosemite National Park at least one month earlier than usual is indicated by the success achieved by Outdoor Franklin in piloting a 1924 Buick over the lofty Sierra road and winding up at Camp Curry after a thrilling eighteen-day battle with snow drifts, deep slush-filled ruts and fallen trees.

Franklin's road blazing with the Buick is the third of a series of similar stunts. In 1921 and 1922 he piloted the first car over the Tioga, but was not a contender in 1923. The successful culmination of his trip this year occurred forty-five days before that in 1921 and 1922, which is prima facie evidence that motorists this year will be able to get over Tioga Summit, which reaches an elevation of 9941 feet, earlier than ever before in history.

Ordinarily the Tioga road is officially opened for travel about the middle of July, but a light snowfall this year and the subsequent early season will probably permit Superintendent Lewis of Yosemite National Park to announce an opening in a week or two. All the other roads into the valley are open and in excellent shape. Even the Big Flat Road and the Glacier Point Road have been traveled rather extensively so far this season, which is decidedly unusual.

YUCCA LAW IS STRICT

Ignorance of the law protecting yucca plants is costing many motorists heavy fines and threatening imprisonments, according to announcement by the Automobile Club of Southern California. In this connection the Auto Club is warning all strangers in the State not to yield to the lure of the beautiful white yucca blooms, as two years ago the county passed an ordinance making it unlawful for any person to mutilate or destroy any yucca plant, or to pick or cut any blooms or blossoms therefrom, whether such plants are growing on public or private land.

This ordinance was passed to prevent the beautiful desert plants from extermination. This is the blooming season and the temptation to motorists is great. Plucking the big blossoms kills the plant so that drastic measures are necessary to save the remaining specimens that form a decorative feature of desert travel.

A fine up to $50 and imprisonment in the County Jail for a term not to exceed thirty days, or both fine and imprisonment may be imposed for violation of the law.

The county forestry department reports to the Automobile Club that many persons are picking the yucca plants in ignorance of the law, which does not excuse them. Hence the club urges that resident motorists familiar with the campaign to save the yucca, inform visiting motorists that the blossoms must not be disturbed.

ACCIDENT MARK IS UNENVIABLE

Los Angeles Leads in Auto Fatalities

Two Types of Motorists Are Responsible

One Won't Signal, Other is Reckless

BY CLARENCE R. SNETHEN
Los Angeles Traffic Commission

Los Angeles is apparently out to hang up another record, but this one will be far from enviable, viz, that of the highest accident record in the United States.

The first four months of 1924 will show an appalling accident record of 103 fatalities and 2647 major injuries—every one in which an automobile was responsible.

There are two types of motorists who are largely responsible for this accident record. First of these is the automobile driver who is unable to restrain his ardor for "getting ahead" sufficiently to remain in his proper place in the procession when he finds his car one of a double or triple line of moving vehicles at rush hour time. He must constantly swoop to one side and "step on it" in order to get a block or two the better of the rest of the crowd. He is a danger to other drivers and pedestrians who at best have a hard time enough of it when they try to negotiate a passage from curb to curb between units of an almost unbroken flow, and who are at least entitled to a reasonable assurance that the flow is to be steady.

MAKE THE SIGNALS

The other is the motorist who never makes a signal. The arm signal is the motorist's greatest protection, as by proper use he can clearly indicate to the machine following just what he ex-

Automotive Legislation Gets Attention From Country's Solons

SANER VIEW IS BEING ADOPTED

First-Hand Information is Sought by States

Examination of Operators is in Sight

Compulsory Insurance Also is Likely

State legislatures that met in 1924 did not show the same tendency to legislate motor vehicles out of existence as has marked some previous sessions, according to a report compiled by the Motor Vehicle Conference Committee and received by Roy H. Compton of the Mack-International Motor Truck Corporation, chairman of the California sub-committee. The Motor Vehicle Conference Committee represents the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce, American Automobile Association, National Automobile Dealers Association, Rubber Association of America and Motor and Accessory Manufacturers Association.

Eleven State legislatures were in session during the last few months. Every one of them devoted some time to automotive legislation. Next year forty-two State legislatures convene and it is needless to say none will overlook this subject. The action of the eleven bodies which met this year will be regarded by the automotive industry as indicative of what may be expected in 1925.

TO GET SPOT LIGHT

According to the Motor Vehicle Conference Committee report license fees, compulsory insurance, common carrier taxes, physical and mental examination of operators, certificates of title, headlight regulation and truck weight and speed limits are the subjects that will receive the chief attention from the legislators.

Although the State assemblies seem to have adopted a saner view of the automotive industry and the automobile driver than has been the past custom, the motor vehicle road is not going to be without blockades and detours. Political obstructionists are certain to undertake to harass the automobile owner with unwarranted restrictions and in some instances "all the traffic will bear" will be the theory for taxation.

New Jersey and Pennsylvania legislaures have shown a tendency to seek first-hand information in respect to motor vehicle taxation and regulation. Special commissions have been appointed for the purpose. In California at this time a commission is making a survey of the highway situation for the purpose of determining the needs and suggesting methods of finance.

It is gratifying to those who have sought to provide California with a sane motor vehicle law to note in the report that several of the other States have incorporated features of the California law in their statutes. It is acknowledged that the law of this State is not perfect in all details but evidently it is close enough to serve as a model for some of the other States.

Compulsory insurance was one of the livest topics considered by the legislatures in session this year. They have been presented in California a number of times and each session sees the movement gaining strength. Practically no other subject occasions as much interest and discussion as this.

BOUND TO COME

Although the automotive industry as a whole has taken no definite stand on this subject, in California it has shown its opposition. Public sentiment is reported to be growing more favorable to the proposition as the result of accidents involving personal or propery damage occasioned by vehicles owned by persons who have no financial responsibility. In this State it has been maintained that compulsory insurance might lead to less careful operation of vehicles as the owner who is properly insured is less likely to consider the chance of an accident as have to pay the damages and he would regard it as getting back something for which he has paid a premium. On the other hand proponents of compulsory insurance claim the driver who has no insurance nor any money is more likely to be reckless as he has nothing to lose. Another element for opposition in this State has been the belief that a compulsory insurance law would result in the State establishing an insurance department and furnishing the insurance at a lower rate than would the standard companies.

Legislatures seem unable to arrive at a basis of fair and equitable motor vehicle taxation. In some States the vehicle license tax is high but there is no personal property assessment. In other States the idea seems to be to get all that can be had from the owner of an automobile and while the personal property tax is maintained a heavy license tax is added.

The California plan of a nominal registration tax and an additional tax on the operation of the vehicle is gaining in favor. The gasoline tax has become general although it was defeated in New Jersey and some other States. South Carolina legislators seemingly sought to pile the burden on as heavily as possible. Passenger car fees on vehicles weighing less than 2000 pounds were raised from $6 to $12 and from $2 for each additional 500 pounds to $6. This means the registration fee on a 3500-pound automobile in that State is now $30. In addition to the gasoline tax some States now have an impost on oil used in motor vehicles.

RAISES LIMIT

Maryland, which State was referred to constantly by advocates of greatly reduced weight limits for motor trucks at the last session of the California Legislature, raised its limit 3000 pounds. Maryland also reduced the special fees exacted of common carriers. In New Jersey the Legislature refused to lower truck weight limits as the result of the argument presented to the effect that New Jersey's highways already are badly congested and lower weight-limits would result in increasing the number of vehicles.

The traffic accident situation has become so serious nationally that State legislators are sure to continue their efforts to alleviate it. The method gaining in popularity is to increase the responsibility of the car driver. It is common practice to license motor vehicle operators and it is claimed for the requirement of examinations of drivers that those obviously unfit to handle a vehicle are denied the privilege. New York this year extended the scope of its driver license regulations.

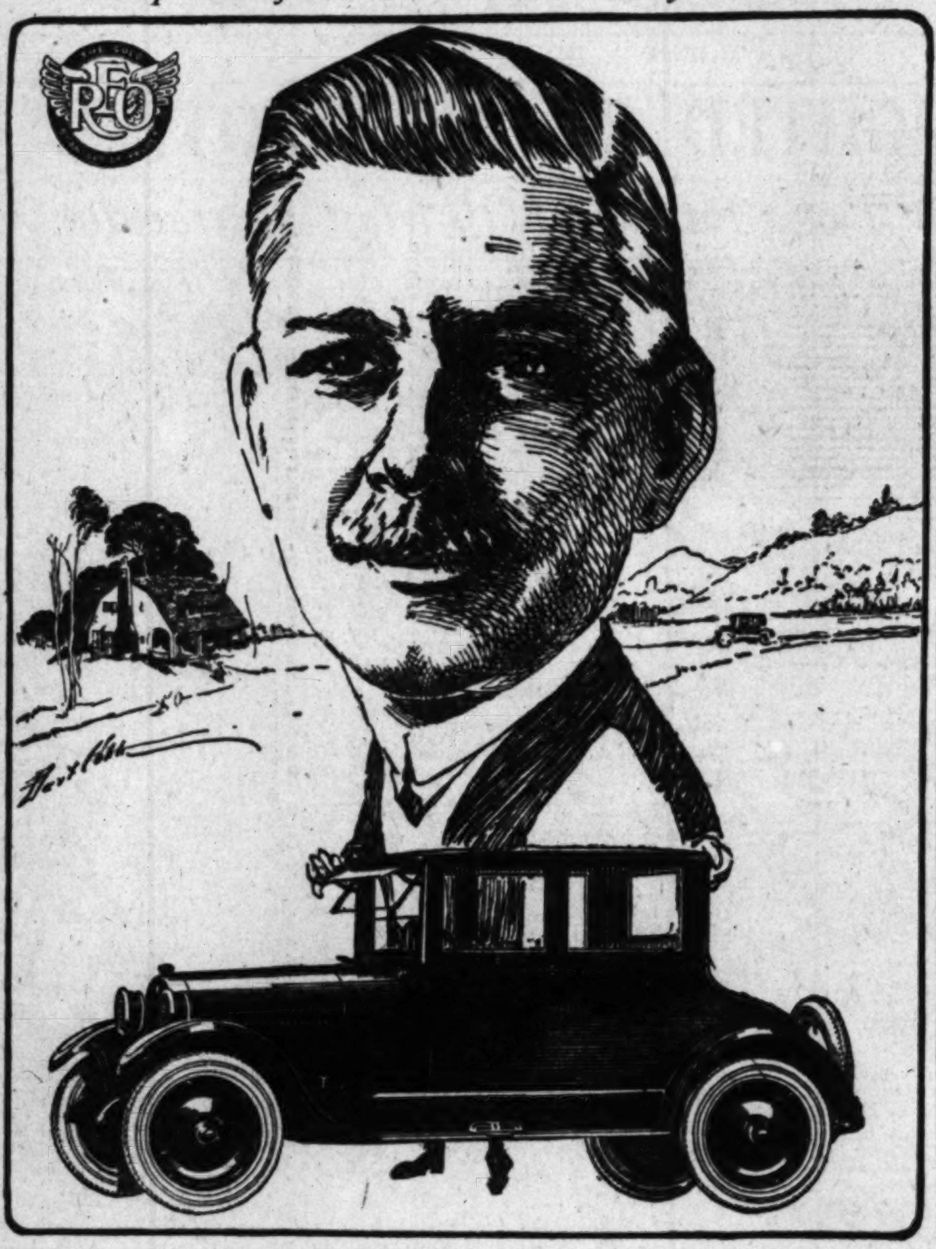
Captains of the Automobile Industry—No. 5



Ransom Eli Olds, President Reo Motor Car Co.

R. E. Olds, a visitor in Los Angeles last week, is one of the real pioneers of the automobile industry. The Reo Company's name is made up of the three initials of the founder, who, of all pioneers, alone acchieved a previous success as a maker of gas engines. He built the first three wheeled horseless carriage in 1887, brought out a practical four-wheeled automobile in 1893, and a gasoline type of automobile in 1896. Since 1904 Mr. Olds has been president of the Reo Motor Car Company. In order to understand why the Reo organization has been so successful and has held together so clearly one must know first that Mr. Olds would never have launched the Reo project but for the fact that he had available a group of men who had proven their fitness to him and who are now so well known as the "Reo folks."

INTO YOSEMITE BY TIOGA PASS

last day of April and on the eighteenth day of May checked in at Camp Curry, timing his arrival so nicely that he reached the camp at the base of Glacier Point the night after the wind-up of the eighth annual economy run. He and his companion, Capt. F. J. Davis, a retired army officer with considerable automobile experience, got in after the supper bars had gone up, but Bob Williams, manager of the camp, came manfully to the rescue and the day was saved for Franklin and "Cap" Davis.

After a stop at Bishop on the night of April 30 Franklin and Davis pointed the Buick toward Mono Lake and checked in at the Leevining Creek ranger station. They encountered the first snow at Ellery Lake, 9600 feet in the air, and from that spot it took them fifteen days to reach Tioga Summit, four and one-half miles away.

It was a case of one snowdrift after another, old ones with a two-inch crust on them. Punishing the car by bucking, backing away and bucking some more, it was slow work for the Buick motorists, who had to sleep in their own car with their heads either pointed up or down at from fifteen to twenty-five degrees. There isn't a level spot on the road to the summit. Preparing food was also a tough job, and both of the battlers mighty near disposed of the available supply at Camp Curry when they reached that haven of rest.

Arrived at the summit it became possible for the Buick to do a little detouring, according to Franklin, and the car was routed around some of the larger drifts. Soft hub-deep going was met through Dana Meadows, but no dead trees barred the way until Tenaya Lake was reached. From there on seventeen were encountered, a few of which it was possible to circumnavigate, the majority being sawed to provide a gateway.

Snowdrifts across Snow Flat slowed up the intrepid motorists there, but from White Wolf, where there were smaller drifts, to Camp Curry Franklin reported the road to be in good condition.

pects to do. The California arm signal law is the simplest in the United States, and no one has any excuse for not making them properly.

The arm signal as prescribed by law are as follows:

To turn left, extend the left arm straight out as far as you can reach. Get into second line of traffic and turn beyond the center of the street, around the button. The law does not permit a left turn across the center stream of traffic.

To turn right, extend the left arm out and up. Don't bend the wrist or elbow. Before turning get into line of traffic nearest the curb, as the law does not allow crossing a stream of traffic while turning.

To stop, extend the left arm out and down. Always signal before stopping, as the biggest per cent of accidents is caused by sudden stops without warning to the drivers behind. A signal must also be made before leaving the curb, as many accidents are caused by cars suddenly darting out into the fast-moving traffic.

All signals must be made from left side of car only, thus forcing the owners of right-hand driven cars to install a mechanical device that will show on the left side of the car. Any mechanical signal device that has been approved by the Division of Motor Vehicles may be used.

The traffic commission urges that every motorist make the proper arm signals, for by each doing so our accident record is certain to decrease. Obey the traffic ordinances and be considerate of the rights of others and Los Angeles will become safe for both drivers and pedestrians.

NEW STANDARDS PROVE POPULAR

New standards of alignment and grade adopted for widening and straightening work now under way on the State highway in the Sacramento Canyon and in Siskiyou county, south of the Oregon line, are being commended by motorists who have had occasion to make the trip.

W. I. Hechtman, well-known Sacramento man, is among those who have been impressed with the value of the construction work now under way.

Returning recently from a trip north into Oregon, Hechtman wrote State Highway Engineer R. M. Morton, as follows:

"I have recently returned from a trip to Oregon and desire to congratulate you upon the condition of the highway and the work that is being done by you in the vicinity of Baird, and between Hornbrook and the Oregon line.

"It is the greatest piece of highway work that I have ever seen, and is equal to the work you have been doing near Ukiah. In fact, believe your job at Baird is probably the finest piece of work of its kind in the West."

Forerunner of Fat Tire Cars Is Displayed

Top removed after the European fashion, the rear fitted with a hand-made leather dummy dust shield, and mounted on balloon tires, a striking model of the Nash six touring car has just been placed on display at the retail sales headquarters of the Troy Motor Sales Company, Nash and LaFayette distributors.

This car, first of the Nash cars to come from the factory equipped with the popular "fat" tires, is but the forerunner of balloon-equipped cars of this make, it is announced, the factory offering the low-pressure tires as selective equipment at a nominal extra cost.

Prior to this, it is stated by John J. Troy, president, there have been both Nash and LaFayette cars out with balloon tires, but these have been put on at the special orders of buyers and were not installed at the factories.

PACIIMA BRIDGE POPULAR AT ONCE

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE]

SAN FERNANDO, May 31.—Travel on the Pasadena-San Fernando State highway made a leap this week, with the formal opening and dedication of the new concrete bridge of two spans crossing Pacoima Wash on Mulholland street. Light traffic and pleasure riders who would escape the congestion of San Fernando Road are exhibiting a decided preference for the more scenic route. The bridge was erected at a cost of $50,000, at the joint expense of the State Highway Commission's fund, the county Board of Supervisors and the city of Los Angeles. With the construction of the great Federal hospital on the Ford-Craig ranch, travel is due to increase materially, as the main hospital buildings will be less than two miles from the main State highway. Plans are developing for the construction of a paved road over this link, thereby bringing the hospital in direct touch with both San Fernando and the cities of the foothills and of the valley itself.

Massive Frame Ruggedly Built
Five Crossmembers---Two of the Tubular Type---Give T
Nash Six Chassis the Strength and Rigidity of Bridgew

Nash engineers have taken more than common precautions to assure a strong bridge-like foundation for the Nash Six chassis.

The huge channel steel side pieces of the frame are anchored firmly together by five staunch cross members—two of the tubular type.

Four wide gusset plates reinforce the tubular center cross members and further increase the massive rigidity of the entire frame.

The Nash body is designed to follow the tapered frame lines, providing additional resistance to strains and stresses.

When the car is in full motion its stability is most apparent. It hangs closely to the road and the rear wheels track the front wheels perfectly even on high crowned roads.

Take a trial ride in the Nash and note your sense of security on rough roads.

MARKET BOOMS ON USED CARS

Enviable Record Established by Peerless Staff

Spring Sales Exceed Those of Same Period in 1923

Stanley W. Smith is Pleased With "Recap" Figures

Refuting the unsound arguments of those persons responsible for the spreading of untrue and insidious propaganda with regard to the supposed deplorable State of business conditions in Los Angeles, Stanley W. Smith, president of the Southern California Peerless distribution, declared yesterday that the volume of used-car business for the first five months of 1924 exceeds by 73 per cent his sales for the same period in 1923.

The merchandising of 378 units, representing a volume of $411,[illegible] is the enviable record established by the used-car department, managed by L. W. "Eph" Andrews, according to the recapitulation of sales from January 1 through May 31. A careful perusal of the "recap," and a study of the sales for the entire five-month period indicates that each month has witnessed an increase in volume over the former, with no slumps in evidence.

That business has been to a marked degree better during this period in 1924 that it was in 1923, recognized as a banner year in automotive circles, may be established by a comparison of the recapitulation of used-car sales of Stanley W. Smith, Inc., for the first five months of last year and the same five months of this year. The period of 1923 witnessed the sale of 238 units, representing a volume of $238,701.

"Business is good," said Mr. Smith in commenting on the result. "How can we feel otherwise when our renewed-car sales for 1924 to date have been 73 per cent greater than they were for the same period of 1923, and when they have shown a healthy increase each month of 1924, rather than a decrease—and a decrease was to be expected if these dispensers of 'hard times' propaganda were to be taken seriously. In part we attribute this wonderful record to our used car sales policy," continued Mr. Smith. "Every unit we take in on a new [illegible] is thoroughly overhauled and new parts installed where needed before it is placed on our used car lot for sale. In other words every one of the units is a renewed car in every sense of the word."

"It has been said that a satisfied customer is the best advertising medium at the service of a distributor. With this thought ever in mind it has at all times been our endeavor to stand back of every used car we have merchandised that we may win a happy, rather than a disgruntled coterie of owners. This policy, too, we are sure, has done its share toward making this phenomenal record possible."

GLENDALE AUTO SHOW IS POSTPONED AWHILE

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE]

GLENDALE, May 31.—Glendale's automobile show that was to have been held on June 23, has been postponed until later in the fall, for the reason that the [illegible] Motor Company's building, in which the show was to have been held, will not be ready in time as had been anticipated. The date for the show will be decided later, but in order to provide entertainment for the members of the Glendale Automobile Dealers' Association in the meantime plans are being made to hold a jinks sometime in June. President [illegible] P. Clark of the association has appointed a committee consisting of C. H. Hunter, Don H. [illegible], Porter A. Kelley and C. L. [illegible] to select a place for the [illegible] and to arrange the program.

Something New in Shaving Machines

Here we have a modern street machine which shaves off the bumps down to a sixteenth of an inch. The cutting arrangement consists of two rows of twelve discs each. An Apperson from Harris Hanshue's Flower street home is pictured.

Shaving Streets Is New Pastime in Los Angeles

Shaving has been a favorite indoor sport of the human race since about 4000 B. C., although history does not tell us exactly when the first man took a razor and forthwith proceeded to remove his beard from his face.

But now 5924 years later comes E. R. Wheeler, formerly of Bakersfield, but now residing in Los Angeles, head of the Wheeler Construction Company, with an apparatus which actually shaves the streets.

The apparatus is built in such a manner that it will take off as little as a sixteenth of an inch of asphalt or will tear it all up just as the operator desires. On each side are timbers twenty-one feet long, sixteen inches high and six inches thick fashioned in a sled-like arrangement with heavy steel plates on each side for additional protection. The cutting arrangement consists of two rows of twelve discs each, half way between which are placed two rows of twenty-six teeth, set in such a manner that any number can be removed. The sled, by the way, according to specifications, is four feet, ten inches in width.

At either end of this device are two rollers, while a blade similar to that of a road grader near the rear scrapes the cut asphalt to the side of the road or street.

A short time ago Harris M. Hanshue, manager here for the Apperson Motor Car Company, distributors for the Apperson, sold Mr. Wheeler a six-cylinder touring car.

LATEST DOPE ON THE ROADS

dogs, cats and pets with the exception of canaries is not permissible. The quarantine dip is still in effect at the county line of San Diego but this is expected to be removed at any time.

Orange County

Conditions in Orange county relative to motor travel are exactly the same as the above.

Imperial County

This county still remains closed territory although there has never been a case of the foot-and-mouth disease there during the recent epidemic. Their main reason in keeping such a close quarantine is that if a case were ever to occur the county restrictions would be so stringent that the fruit crop would be a total loss as a ban would immediately be placed preventing the exporting of any fruit from that county—hence their desire to remain free from the disease.

Riverside County

Riverside county is open in its entirety. Fishing, camping and motor travel are permitted in all sections of the county—all mountain roads are open.

San Bernardino County

This county has been removed from under the foot-and-mouth quarantine ban for over two weeks. All mountain roads are open, no disinfection dips to drive through, no guards—fishing and camping now permitted.

Ventura

All guards, dips and disinfection stations have been removed for over two weeks. All roads, trails and streams in that county are open to campers, fishermen and those desiring to drive in the mountain sections.

Kern County

All main roads are open through Kern county and the mountain sections are open to all. There is still one disinfectant dip some four inches in depth which has to be driven through entering Kern county via the Ridge.

San Luis Obispo

This county is open and fishing, camping and motoring are permitted at all points in the county.

Tulare

All roads open in Tulare and into the national parks and national forests. Sequoia and General Grant are open to motorists and all streams, mountain roads and trails passable to those desiring to drive into the mountain fastnesses.

YELLOWSTONE OPENS TODAY

Company will be able to accommodate from ten to fifteen people per night, but meals will have to be served in construction crew mess halls as regular dining-rooms will not be ready until June 15 or 20.

Free public camping grounds, maintained by the National Park Service, will be available at all points of interest. These are supplied with pure water, wood, comfort stations and garbage disposal facilities. A self-help laundry is a new feature of the Mammoth Automobile Camp.

During the 1923 season, over 70,000 motorists used these camping grounds. Altogether, last season, 94,224 people toured the park in their own cars, and it is expected that not less than 125,000 motorists will see Yellowstone National Park this year.

GERMANY WANTS OUR MOTORCARS

maybe very slowly, we will get back on our industrial feet. We will. There is no question about that. We want motor cars and a great many of them."

There was little change in the industry's situation the past week. Continued disagreeable weather conditions which prevailed in the Middle West have adversely affected some companies while others are maintaining a fairly steady production pace. Rumors of price boosts are current, especially in the popular priced field, but official confirmation is lacking. On the other hand gossip has it that Ford is considering a decrease in prices. Factory heads, however, refuse to deny or confirm that such a move is contemplated.

Operation of motor trucks for package freight in parallel lines with its right of way by the New York Central Railroad, between Cleveland and Erie, Pa., has been so successful officials of the road announced, that the practice is to be extended along the lines wherever practicable. This is one of the first major instances where a railroad has used motor transportation along the line of its own tracks, the practice heretofore having been to use trucks as feeders in territories not served by rail.

A study of traffic west of Toledo is now being made, officials declare, in what is known as the Central's fourth district with a view of installing the system there. Traffic between Cleveland and Toledo will be studied after that. Good hard surfaced highways connects these two cities.

Shipments of two-ton and heavy-duty trucks show a decided increase for the first four months of 1924 over the same period last year, according to a report of the General Motors Truck Company. The increasing number of heavy-duty trucks delivered reflects demands by general contractors, builders and road contractors, indicating a large program of structural and road building is being put through, the report says.

Samuel V. Harding of the Marmon forces, will join the Columbia Motor Car Company's staff as service manager, Vice-President Fred Wilson announces. This step has been taken in order to cater in an even more comprehensive way to the needs of Columbia six owners, both present and future. Harding's experience and training fit him admirably for such a position. While acting as service engineer for Marmon, he spent much of the time traveling and educating dealers in the proper servicing of automobiles. He supplemented this educational effort by conducting a service school at the Marmon factory.

"We have great confidence in Harding's ability," said Wilson, in commenting upon the appointment. "Although we have reason to believe through extensive investigation that Columbia service costs are lower than any car in its class it is Harding's intention to still further lower them. He has been given a free hand in his department to accomplish this purpose."

"Expect great things," the slogan with which the Cadillac Motor Car Company introduced its new V-63 car has been supplemented by a recent declaration from the company that "one who has not driven the new V-63 does not know Cadillac."

The expression was originated by Lynn McNaughton, vice-president and general sales manager as the summary of experiences of dealers and distributors who have returned to first principles in their methods of marketing the new car by urging prospective buyers to drive.

"After more than six months employment of our slogan, 'Expect Great Things' we find every day that more and more motorists who drive the new V-63 for the first time are telling us that until they took the wheel themselves they never realized what Cadillac engineers had accomplished producing the new car," states Mr. McNaughton.

A substantial increase in foreign sales is reported by the Velie Motor Car Company. During the first four months of the current year Velie sold 100 per cent more cars for export than during the entire twelve months of last year. The most noticeable increase is shown in Australia and Argentine.

A Velie touring car won the famous economy run of the Royal Automobile Club of Queensland, Australia, according to a cablegram just received from the Antipodes.

This car averaged 35.5 miles to the imperial gallon of gasoline and set a record for cars in its class. There were more than a dozen entries in the Velie class, the majority of which were American cars, the cablegram stated.

Recognizing that a drastic remedy must be applied John Hertz, president of the Yellow Cab Manufacturing Company of Chicago has offered a prize of $50,000 in cash for a perfected plan for the promotion of greater street safety. The suggestion contest is open to everyone and may consist of an idea, a mechanical device or a combination of both.

Labor turnover at the Reo Motor Company plant for the first four months of this year was 2.15 per cent. This compares with a turnover for the corresponding period a year ago of 3.57 per cent. For the entire year of 1923 this item was placed at 3.7, although the month of April showed a replacement of 5.4 per cent of the men employed. April of this year places this figure at only 2.3 per cent. Replacement in March was 2.9 per cent compared to 4.5 per cent for the same month a year ago.

South Africa is rapidly becoming a fertile field for the automobile business, according to Arthur Williams of the General Motors Export Corporation, who was a visitor at the Olds Motor Works this week. Mr. Williams has been actively associated with the sales end of the auto industry for the past fourteen years as manager of the South African branch of the General Motors Export Company.

Erection of dams and building of irrigation system have greatly broadened the trade field in South Africa in the past few years, Mr. Williams said. These new activities have resulted in an increase in population and much road building. Mr. Williams has headquarters at Johannesburg and is in charge of sales in the entire African territory south of the equator.

Articles of incorporation of the Associated Bodies Corporation have been filed with the County Clerk at Louisville, Ky., by R. F. Monroe, D. C. Harris, J. W. Sling, F. W. Hohensee, W. L. Rowe and W. W. Murphy. The officers who will have active charge of the new corporation are: R. F. Monroe, president; D. C. Harris, vice-president and treasurer; J. W. Slinger, vice-president and secretary.

The general offices main operations of the corporation will be at Louisville, Ky., where an assembly and distributing plant will be established at once, to be followed shortly by a large combined manufacturing and assembly plant.

Increased production of the Oldsmobile cab has become necessary to meet the demand and additional employees have been put to work on this model, according to Oldsmobile plant officials. The increase is believed to be due to the fact that an increase in the number of women drivers has been effected.

"Reports from dealers have revealed that a growing number of women were selecting the cab for their own personal car because this type of car is ideal for their wants," said Guy H. Peasley, sales manager. "It has all weather protection, ample seating capacity for two and has an unusual amount of luggage space."

Rollin Motor Car Company sales in April slightly exceeded production, totalling 1137 cars, of which 855 were closed models. Progress of the Rollin company since its inception has been noteworthy. Production did not actually get under way until the first of the current year. In March 921 cars were turned out and April's output totaled 1071. May production was approximately 1150.

Owing to the heavy charge-offs that are being made, the Company's earnings are interesting. In addition to the usual reserves for taxes, doubtful accounts and depreciation, a contingency reserve of $29,657 was set up in April. The company showed a net profit of $36,083 for the month despite this fact. Combined earnings for March and April after reserves for contingencies of $48,145 left a net profit of $32,994.

Years Spent in Perfecting of Auto Finishes

The usage that the family carriage received in the days of horsedrawn vehicles was very different indeed from that which the average automobile gets. The family surrey or brougham was very apt to be left in the barn if the day was stormy. It did not stand out in the rain or sun day after day, and it was probably not exposed to the weather in actual service one tenth as much as the modern automobile which is used every day regardless of weather conditions.

"As a consequence, the types of paint and varnish that gave good service on the fine carriages of former days, did not prove as satisfactory on automobiles. Yet years passed by before anything better was developed to take their place," says Harley Earl, manager of the paint and body works division of Don Lee.

"The work of development of a body finish that would stand the new conditions imposed by the way automobiles are used was a task that required years for its satisfactory solution by industrial chemists. The final development of Duco by the engineers of the Dupont interests resulted from attacking the problem from an entirely new angle.

"In its chemical composition and its method of application Duco is entirely distinct from a paint or a varnish. It has proved by far the most satisfactory material that we have ever used and our experience goes back considerably more than thirty years of finishing fine vehicles for use under Southern California conditions."

ARIZONA CHIEF WANTS ALL DRIVERS EXAMINED

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

PHOENIX, May 31.—Chief of Police George Brisbois states his belief that every person who operates a motor car should be required to pass a compulsory mental and physical examination. He adds: "We have no such laws at present, and there is nothing to prevent a crazy man from driving a car. If we had such a law, compelling persons to have a registration card before driving a car and it was found that the driver had caused an accident through recklessnes or disability, physical or mental, the registration card could be revoked."

We proved Overland Economy

All along we told you of Overland power and economy. We challenged you to find equal automobile value anywhere near Overland's price.

Then came the annual Yosemite Economy Run in which Overland and a number of other cars were pitted in normal driving competition.

What happened? Why Overland simply cleaned up! One Overland romped into first place ahead of all other cars, averaging 29.36 miles per gallon of gasoline, and winning the prized Sweepstakes Cup. Another Overland won the Cup in Class 1-A, averaging 28.03 miles per gallon for 400 miles.

Power, Economy, Comfort, Durability, Good Looks—these are Overland qualities that make Overland the greatest automobile in the world for the money.

SALES CONTEST STIRS RIVALRY

Friendly Confab Precipitates Nation-wide Affair

Competition Keen as Dealers Vie for Honors

Local Maxwell Forces Lead by Conan Doyle

A friendly discussion between three of Maxwell's largest distributors during a recent visit to the factory as to which had the best organization furnished the spark that has ignited the whole Maxwell dealer and sales organization into the largest sales contest in the history of the Maxwell Motor Corporation.

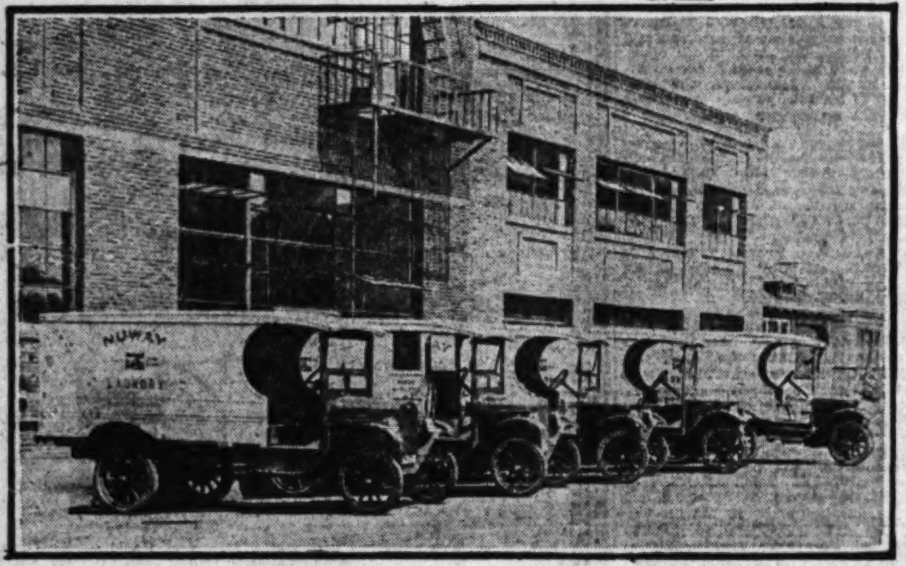
Heated discussions regarding their organization's abilities have long been held by the trio—one from the East, a second from the Middle West and a third from the Pacific Coast.

But instead of a rivalry between these organizations it has developed into a national rivalry. Instead of three organizations fighting it out to see which is the best, word of the contest spread to other concerns and fanned a rivalry that has swept through the entire Maxwell organization from the Atlantic to the Pacific. As a result nearly 2000 Maxwell dealers have entered themselves and their 10,000 salesmen into what has become the National Maxwell Sales Contest. Every Maxwell dealer, as a consequence, is working to best his particular rival Maxwell dealer.

"Because of the marvelous start made by several organizations we will have to sell more Maxwells during the next two months than we have ever sold to stand a chance of winning one of the national honors," Conan Doyle of the Union Motors, Inc., Maxwell distributors in Southern California, asserted yesterday. "For the last seven or eight weeks Maxwell dealers the country over have been reporting record sales to the factory. With the big selling months just ahead, it stands to reason that all records heretofore made are going glimmering during the contest.

"So far the Union Motors has been giving a mighty good account of itself. In fact right now we have several other distributors sitting up and worrying at night in an endeavor to defeat us. Every salesman realizes the battle for supremacy is far from won even with our wonderful showing and as a result our entire force is working harder than ever to roll up deliveries."

How Do You Like Your Clothes Delivered?



If you prefer them in Chevrolet delivery wagons the Nuway Laundry Company can fill the bill, for ten light delivery trucks have just been purchased by the firm.

ADD TWO MORE BRAKES

Balloon tires and perfected four-wheel brakes will now come as optional equipment on Flint cars at a slight extra cost, according to an announcement which has been made by the Durant Motor Company of California. This additional equipment, which offers greater riding and safety qualities, is being received with enthusiasm by dealers and prospective purchasers of this sensational six of W. C. Durant.

According to J. W. Hawk, general sales manager of the Durant Motor Company of California, the four-wheel brake equipment offers every latest advantage of four-wheel braking systems and will, no doubt, prove to be a big selling factor on this new product.

"An independent braking installation has been evolved for front wheels which co-ordinates perfectly with the present standard rear-wheel brakes. The actual design and construction of the Flint front-wheel braking mechanism follows the most approved engineering practice with improvements in simplification and accessibility for the convenience of the owner," states Hawk.

The actual braking action at the point of contact on the wheel is applied by internal expanding toggle brake bands. A single nut between the ends of the bands provides for wear here.

From a cross shaft on the front axle the braking force is directed through a pin inside the king pin to the lever which atuates the brake bands. Thus it is seen that the line of applied pressure is directly through the center of the turning radius of each front wheel, in this respect eliminating all resistance to steering.

SPELLING BEE CLOSES

The "Overland Spelling Bee" in which the person compiling the greatest number of correct words out of the name "Overland" is to be awarded one of the late model Overland touring cars, closed officially at midnight the 31st inst.

The judges are busy checking the thousands of lists that came in from all over Southern California. Webster's International Dictionary, published by Merriam & Merriam, is the authority on which correct words will be checked.

The winner will be announced, according to L. J. McCracken, manager of the Willys-Overland-Pacific Company, at the earliest possible date consistent with the accurate checking of the lists by the judges.

In case of a tie as to the number of correct words submitted by any two contestants, the method of finally choosing the winner has been left to the contest judges, who are disinterested and impartial.

Laundry Firm Augments Its Fleet Service

The Los Angeles Chevrolet Dealers' Association reports that commercial firms are rapidly adding Chevrolets to the transportation mediums used for rapid delivery purposes.

The latest organization to fall in line and standardize on Chevrolet delivery units is the Nuway Laundry. This firm recently purchased ten light delivery chassis from one of the members of the Chevrolet Dealers' Association and had them equipped with a standard laundry type body.

Mr. J. E. Schnell, special representative of the fleet sales division of the Chevrolet Motor Company, who has been in Los Angeles for the past three weeks, states that Los Angeles is one of the best fields in the United States for the sale of motorized delivery fleets. The incomparable system of paved city streets and suburban highways make it possible for city business firms to establish suburban delivery systems and thereby greatly enlarge their trading area.

WISE WORDS ON FIRE

Eastern motorists who are beginning to invade this section by thousands should be warned personally against carelessness with fire in the national forests, according to announcement by the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California. It is pointed out that while residents of this section are familiar with conditions and know that the long dry season makes extra precautions necessary, the stranger does not realize the danger of leaving camp fires burning and carelessly throwing away lighted matches or burning cigarettes.

"One tree will make 1,000,000 matches—one match will destroy 1,000,000 trees," is the lesson that should be impressed on all motorists entering the national forests and other sections where the dry undergrowth readily ignites and quickly gets beyond control. This situation entails constant thoughtfulness and every resident motorist is urged to impress personally the lesson upon visitors from other sections.

There are nearly 20,000,000 acres in the nineteen national forests of California, the scenic beauties of which are open to the public. The only provision that Uncle Sam makes as host is that the visitors be extremely careful with their camp fires and matches and that they refrain from polluting streams and scattering rubbish.

Last year more than 4,000,000 persons entered the national forests of California and 85 per cent of these used their own automobiles for conveyance.

During the rainless season additional rangers are placed in the forests. Airship patrols are maintained; radio broadcasting is used; and a most elaborate system for protection of trees and visitors is placed in effect.

Every possible safeguard will be employed this year, as it is expected that at lest 5,000,000 persons will accept Uncle Sam's invitation to enjoy recreation periods in his beautiful and primeval estates.

COOLIES GATHER NUTS FOR PAINT

Coolies in Central China are laboriously gathering nuts of the Tung tree and pressing them in crude, hand-power presses that we in this country may drive vari-colored automobiles with durable baked enamel finish, Tung, or Chinawood oil, as it is known to the trade, is the basis for colored enamels perfected by the Olds Motor Works and used exclusively on sport model Oldsmobiles.

NOTABLES BUY CARS

Two recent purchasers of Franklin air-colored sixes af national renown are Orville Wright, who, with his brother, made the first successful flight in an airplane, and James Montague, the fiction writer.

Fast Ride to Big Bear for Bay Residents

Charley Carr, Franklin subdealer at Ocean Park, gave three prospects quite an interesting demonstration last week when he drove them from Santa Monica to the dam at Big Bear Lake in three hours and forty-five minutes elapsed time. When he started out he told them he was going to wheel the Franklin touring car up there in less than four hours and he kept his word. Incidentally the car he used has traveled better than 18,000 miles and has several jaunts to Bishop in nine hours or less to its credit.

This demonstration was by way of City Creek and the cut-off and after arriving at the lake and stowing away a good meal they decided they had too much time and ambition left, so started up the old abandoned road to the Rose mine from Baldwin Lake. Arriving at the mine after somewhat of a struggle they were informed that was the finish, but further questioning of the watchman elicited the information that a cattle trail led down to the Pipes and then to the Morongo Pass. They covered the four miles from the Rose mine in four hours, so tough was the rocky going, and eventually reached the Morongo and rolled out over the Devil's Garden, returning to Santa Monica by way of Banning and Redlands.

It's what Oakland gives for $995 that counts

Many important features of the Oakland Six cannot be obtained in other cars in its class.

Bear these facts in mind in choosing a car:		Here are the advantages Oakland offers:
Be sure that the engine in the car you choose incorporates the very latest design. Examine its construction closely.	1	Oakland's engine is the last word in advanced design. Automotive engineers everywhere praise its construction.
Be sure you get the latest braking system. Four-wheel brakes are safer. Do not buy a car without this proved essential.	2	Every True Blue Oakland has four-wheel brakes at no added cost. They are sound in both principle and practice.
Ordinary body finishes are perishable and easily marred. Get the facts about Oakland's remarkable new finish.	3	Oakland alone, in its class, has a special new finish which will not check nor lose its lustre.
Observe whether driving controls are convenient. Compare other cars with Oakland in this respect.	4	Oakland's controls—all of them except gear shift—are on the steering wheel; an exclusive Oakland feature.
The tendency is toward a more substantial top for open cars. Examine cars with this point in mind.	5	Everyone likes Oakland's permanent top. Curtains fit better and special glass enclosures are furnished at low cost.
Although disc steel wheels are admittedly superior, most builders in this class make you pay extra for them.	6	All True Blue Oaklands have disc steel wheels at no extra cost. They are better looking and safer.
Consider the body design and workmanship of cars in this class. Are the bodies attractive and also substantial?	7	Oakland's distinctive bodies—seven of them—are all Fisher-built. Everyone comments on their smart appearance.

Think these things over. The True Blue Oakland is built and priced to be the leading value in its field. You can easily verify this fact by careful comparisons.

A Fine Car that Costs Little to Operate

One outstanding feature of this majestic, powerful Peerless Eight is its remarkable long mileage at such ridiculously low operating cost.

Built into the Peerless "V"-type motor and into every part of the chassis, is a staunchness and a nicety of balance that result in unusual freedom from wear and repairs.

After months of rigorous service, owners find this dependable car still free from carbon —still the remarkably smooth, noiseless Eight it was at the start. The same superabundance of power is there that marked its first few thousand miles.

For the Peerless Eight possesses stamina and endurance far beyond any rational requirement. It is a masterpiece of care and precision. And, as such, it gives that masterful performance so appreciated by those who know fine motor cars.

If you would experience the highest type of motor car performance, by all means ride in the Peerless Eight.

Resort Notes

Resort Owners Elect Officers

Election of officers of the San Diego Mountain Resorts' Association was accomplished at a meeting this week. Newly elected officers include: C. Walter Clements of Pine Hills, president; Mrs. E. F. Clark of Alpine, secretary; Ed Davis of Mesa Grande, treasurer; George H. Millener, Alpine Tavern, vice-president.

The association is now two years old and, according to the report of L. N. Palmer, retiring president, from Hulburd's Grove, the association has no unpaid bills and possesses a balance in the treasury.

"The old order of competition in the hotel business and resort business is rapidly changing," says Palmer, "the great influx of people to California is providing guests in abundance in San Diego county. Two years ago even the name San Diego Mountains had not been coined. Today the San Diego Mountains are known all over Southern California, at least, and are recognized as one of California's great recreation grounds. We have had wonderful help and cooperation from newspapers, automobile men and the Automobile Club, from hotel men and information bureaus, and from an ever increasing army of individuals."

Realization is slowly coming to San Diego that the back country is one of the most important things it has to sell. The bay, the ocean beaches and the mountain resort country are the invincible three that San Diego has to offer in greater abundance and open to more easy access over fine highways than any other county in California.

Toyon Camp Improved

Six horses have been added to the equipment of the Toyon Camp for Girls, situated three miles west of Avalon on Santa Catalina Island, according to Mrs. Katherine [illegible] of the Girls' Collegiate School in this city, who is assistant director of the camp.

Riding will be under the direction of Miss Proud of Glendora [illegible] School. Ring riding and trail trips by horseback will be featured.

An additional tennis court has been installed. Six "Old Town" canoes and two flat-bottomed rowboats rigged with sails for racing and two dinghies have been purchased.

Miss Marjorie Moser, student of dramatic art in the University of Southern California, will be in charge of story telling and of the training of the girls in camp for the annual Toyon girls' camp pageant, given at the end of the camp season. Mrs. James Livingston of Santa Monica will conduct the group singing and hopes to develop harmonizing around the camp fire. During the six weeks of the first camp season, from July 1 to August 12, the young women spend their time in swimming and water sports, land sports and games, riding, drama, dancing and story hour with enough practical work in arts and crafts and camp government to keep up the ambition of the girls in the competition for higher attainments.

Practically the same delightful program is followed in the last season, which opens August 14 and continues until September 24. In order that the students may have ample opportunities to continue their work a large faculty of ex-teachers is maintained. Mrs. [illegible] Laurie, also of the Girls' Collegiate School, is the director of the camp.

Tourist Travel Better

That tourist travel to San Diego is returning to normal and promises to be unusually good this summer is the belief of John Rankin, proprietor of the New Southern Hotel of San Diego, who was a visitor in Los Angeles last week. Mr. Rankin is the secretary of the [illegible] Men's Association of his city and is in position to know conditions.

"The recent quarantine regulations," said Mr. Rankin, "affected business for a while and seemed to threaten travel this summer. The last few weeks, however, indicate a return to more normal conditions and point to still better business in the coming months.

Mr. Rankin's hostelry is located across from the new Pantages Theater Building and is in a neighborhood where business activity is increasing at a rapid rate.

New Wawona Pro

Frank Johnston, golf professional of the Northwest, has recently arrived at the Wawona Hotel, Wawona, to take charge of the golf course of that hotel. The course is in excellent condition due to the recent improvement of the greens and fairways, according to reports received from C. A. Washburn, manager of the hotel.

Seven Oaks Now Open

Seven Oaks mountain resort in the San Bernardino Mountains, east of Redlands, opened for the summer season last Wednesday. Seven Oaks is one of the oldest resorts in the mountains, having been established by an Englishman by the name of Mathew Lewis about forty-five years ago.

Mr. Lewis was attracted to California in the early days, having heard of the gold discoveries in Holcomb Valley, near Big Bear Valley and Seven Oaks. While out in the mountains one day Mr. Lewis discovered the location of the present Seven Oaks, and set up a stopping place there for travelers between San Bernardino Valley and the Big Bear Valley country. He named it Seven Oaks after his home estate in England.

W. H. Glass, the present owner and manager of Seven Oaks, states that the coming summer season will undoubtedly be the largest in the history of the resort.

BOB BREYER IS IN KENOSHA, WIS.

Robert S. Breyer, vice-president and general manager of the Troy Sales Company, Nash and Lafayette distributors, is this week in Kenosha, Wis., headquarters of the Nash factories, in regular annual conference with Charles W. Nash and other officials of the organization. After a visit to the Nash "4" and the Lafayette factories at Milwaukee, Mr. Breyer will return to Los Angeles probably about June 5, it is stated.

Five Victories in Five Starts Are Collected

The performance of the Oakland in the last Yosemite Economy Run demonstrated that economy is built into every Oakland and is not the result of painstaking effort in preparation and the ability of a super driver, according to H. E. Franklin, manager of the California Oakland Motor Company.

"In the last five economy runs in Southern California in the last three years the Oakland has been entered," says Franklin, "and in these five starts it has five times won the cup for its class and four times merited the sweepstakes cup over all entries and once won the sweepstakes cup for closed cars.

"These victories, made in successive events were won by five different cars and two different drivers, proving that it is the car and not the driver which won the cup, and the fact that five different Oaklands were the victors in their respective honors demonstrates that economy is an essential part of Oakland construction.

"Owners tell us that they get from twenty to twenty-five miles to the gallon in every-day use. Oakland performance in recognized economy contests substantiates these claims and has resulted in the Oakland climbing from a low place among all cars sold in sales volume to a position among the leaders, in fact it has increased the sale of Oakland sixes 200 per cent over last year. This popularity has been won by the actual performance of the Oakland as indicated by the records of competent officials in these economy runs."

SETTLING MOTORISTS' DISPUTES OUT OF COURT BECOMES POPULAR

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

WASHINGTON (D. C.) May 26. Settling motorists' disputes out of court has developed rapidly into one of the leading functions of the modern automobile club, according to Thomas P. Henry, president of the American Automobile Association, in a recent comment on a report of the handling of disputes arising between members of a number of affiliated clubs.

Because of the unique aptitude of the automobile clubs for this sort of service, Mr. Henry says, many car owners are finding it more satisfactory to take their troubles to the local club rather than to court, the matter being settled without the expense of legal fees and the inconvenience of formal action.

The sucess of the Lancaster Automobile Club of Pennsylvania in appointing a jury of club directors to settle damage cases arising from collisions among members' cars is cited as an instance of the possible development of the plan. The club in question has successfully settled many cases in the two years that the scheme has been operative, and the amount of time and money saved for members as a consequence is said to be such as to encourage general adoption of the plan by affiliated A.A.A. clubs everywhere.

"The directors of any automobile club are themselves experienced drivers, President Henry explains. "That is assurance that they are in a position to view a damage case with a clear understanding of the facts involved. In the club suit the tricks of the law profession do not feature at all. Neither party has anyone to defend him. Neither has anyone to prosecute him. All he can do is to state his case, lay his cards on the table and take his medicine, if he deserves it.

"These club cases, even when not conducted by so carefully a developed procedure as that found in the Lancaster club, are helping to give thousands of motorists a better conception of their responsibilities. Any discussion of this kind results in a review of the motor vehicle laws, together with an intelligent interpretation of the same, and the motorist cannot escape absorbing many points that will be of direct benefit to the community as well as to himself."

Locally Born 'Pub' Company Changes Name

Announcement has been made of the extension of activities of the Automobile Publishing Company at 1702 South Flower street. This company, which was founded nearly twelve years ago by Mr. C. H. Townsend, who is known to thousands of local business men as "Charlie," has experienced in the intervening years a really remarkable development and growth. Starting in a small way in 1913 at 802 West Sixth street, Mr. Townsend, with the assistance of only one girl at that time, has developed the business until it is now the largest direct mail advertising concern in the West, employing at the present time a force of about 125 persons.

C.H. Townsend

In the beginning Mr. Townsend was putting out an automobile directory only. This was after a time superseded by the direct mail advertising work coupled with the publication of automobile mailing lists, and the supplying of automobile dealers throughout the country with mailing lists, and lists of daily motor-car registrations.

The Automobile Publishing Company, whose customers now embrace over 6000 business houses of all kinds, is now changing the name under which it was founded, to the name C. H Townsend, Inc.

Concurrent with the announcement of the change in name comes the announcement of the company's entrance into the advertising agency field. The advertising agency and service department will be under the direction of Mr. W. Austin Compbell, who has been appointed vice-president of the company.

Gypsy Model Is Meeting Demand for Tour Cars

Open season in the "great open spaces" finds many motorists with divided sentiments as to the joys of a sojourn among the birds, bees and other insects.

Hardy souls who can sleep on three or four pebbles and a sharp, protruding root, who like sand in the beans and bugs in the melting butter, need not concern themselves with the order or manner of their going; but where the lure of luxury competes with the call of the wild the gasoline gypsy is constrained to careful preparation.

Don P. Smith, Inc., Southern California distributors, are meeting the demand for city comfort on the broad highway with the new "Gypsy Moon," a car calculated to make camping a pleasure and touring a pastime unalloyed by sleepless nights and boggled breakfasts.

The car is so constructed that it serves as well for a home as the average single apartment. A generously spacious bed is instantly available by doing a few simple things to the seats. And on awaking in the morning the tourist has only to step out and open the trunk carried at the rear of the car to find a completely equipped kitchenette with stove and utensils and service for six people.

Completion of Hollywood Home Is Celebrated

Four months after the completion of its new $150,000 sales building at 6455-57 Sunset Boulevard, one of the finest establishments of its kind in Hollywood, the Hollywood Marmon Company is just now celebrating the erection of this monument to Marmon popularity.

But it is not the usual kind of celebration held upon the opening of a new building—no public receptions or floral displays. It is a celebration that the Hollywood Marmon Company really began preparing for weeks before the building was completed, when the sales force moved into the partially finished structure and started a whirlwind campaign to pile up a record of Marmon sales.

The Hollywood Marmon Company is therefore celebrating two very important victories in honor of its new building. One victory is the attainment of first place among Marmon dealers in cities of the Hollywood class, for the largest number of sales made during the past six months. The second victory has just been scored by a member of the Hollywood Marmon Company sales organization, Don Paden, who has won the highest number of points in the Marmon factory's National Hit-'Em-Hard Sales Contest, for the Western zone.

CUT-OUT CHASSIS ON EXHIBITION

New York Model for Local Consumption

All the Insides Exposed for View

Demonstrating Chrysler Here Thirty Days

A cut-out chassis of the Chrysler six—the same that was displayed at the New York show, where it created a sensation—is now on exhibition at the showroom of the Greer-Robbins Company, Chrysler distributor for Southern California, where it will be for a period of thirty days. After that it will be passed on to other distributors as there is a pressing demand for it in all the large centers.

"No better insight into Chrysler engineering and construction could possibly be furnished," declared an official of the concern. "It enables the motor-wise to see at a glance the refined mechanism that is under the hood and beneath the body of the car, and which, in the opinion of many noted automotive engineers, is the very last word in motor-car design. There are those who believe the Chrysler six is destined to change the whole course of motor-car design. The many Chrysler owners in the city will find interest in its examination, for the cut-out feature will enable them to see how their car functions."

Visitors will learn at first hand how an engine with only three-inch bore by four and three-quarter-inch stroke delivers sixty-eight horsepower and attains a speed of over seventy miles per hour. This same engine operates so economically, it is claimed, that the average gas consumption is between eighteen and twenty miles per gallon. Owners report this to be the case.

Even a casual examination of the chassis will show it to be free of brake and torque rods, which are seldom, if ever, greased and which are inclined to breed rattles. The exhibit further affords an opportunity for one to see the simplicity, yet wonderful efficiency of the Chrysler-Lockheed four-wheel hydraulic brakes.

The new type of spring mounting, with springs close to the hubs and parallel to the wheels, makes it possible to drive the Chrysler around turns at between forty and fifty miles an hour, and totally eliminates all side sway and road weaving. This is one particular feature of the many embodied in the new Chrysler six that brings forth unstinted admiration from owners, as well as those who have had the fortune to ride in the car.

CORRECT SIGNALS WILL SAVE LIVES

"The present rate of automobile accidents can be largely minimized if car drivers would observe one very important traffic rule," asserts Conan Doyle of the Union Motors Inc., Maxwell distributors. "This rule is the simplest and easiest to remember but somehow or other motorists either forget it or completely ignore it. Boiled down to the fewest words it is, Be sure to signal correctly when-

DISSIPATES CONFUSION

Distinction Between National Parks and National Forest Reserves is Explained by Auto Club

Although the "See America First" movement has done much in familiarizing the public with government scenic spots, there remains much confusion in the minds of the people over national forests and national parks. This is particularly true of eastern residents where there are so few public domains set aside for the benefit of the people. Lack of knowledge on the part of the eastern population is indicated in the thousands of inquiries coming to the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California.

In order to clarify the situation and bring out the distinction between the national forests and national parks, the Automobile Club is answering queries with a statement by Paul G. Redington, district forester.

"There are seventeen national forests in California with a net area of over 19,000,000 acres. The national parks of the State are four in number and include an area of approximately 1,000,000 acres.

DIFFERENT HEADS

"The national forests are administered by the Forest Service of the United States Department of Agriculture; while the national parks are under the jurisdiction of the National Park Service of the Department of the Interior.

"The purpose of the national forests is to protect and maintain, in a permanent productive and useful condition, lands unsuited to agriculture, but capable of yielding lumber or other general benefits, such as forage for live stock; water for irrigation, domestic use and power, and playgrounds for our citizens. All the resources of the national forest are developed to the greatest possible extent consistent with permanent productivity under the principle of coordinated use. The principle of use of resources is the vital distinction between national forests and national parks.

PRESERVE SCENERY

"The purpose of creating national parks is to preserve the scenery, the natural and historic objects, and the plants and wild life. The objects are the enjoyment of the people and the aiding of education and scientific study by keeping such areas unimpaired. National parks are protected completely from any and all utilitarian and commercial enterprises save those necessary for and subservient to legitimate park uses.

"Many writers will confuse the national forests with parks; others call them 'forest reserves,' although Congress many years ago officially changed the name of these Federal areas to national forests. I am sure that anyone at all familiar with the use that is being made of national forest resources for the benefit of our citizens and the upbuilding of California will appreciate the inappropriateness of the old term 'reserve.'"

Sport Roadster Is Name of the New 'Rick' Car

"Sport Roadster" is the name of the new two-passenger speed model Rickenbacker six. It will not be known as the "Scout" despite the announcement of the selection of that name from among 10,000 suggested in a recent contest. Mr. J. H. Tolle of Deming, N. M., won the prize offered by the Rickenbacker Motor Company when they selected the name Scout, which had to be discarded and instead called just what it suggested on first sight, "Sport Roadster," according to Leon T. Shettler.

"The reason why the name had to be discared," according to Mr. Shettler, "was that the designation 'Scout' pertaining to any commodity for sale is reserved to and is the exclusive property of that wonderful organization, the Boy Scouts of America. A special act of Congress so provides; and that act was deemed necessary to prevent exploitation of the boy members by makers of various and sundry articles, good, bad and indifferent."

THIRTEEN ANGELENOS IN EXCLUSIVE CLUB

"The Four Hundred" of the $100,000 Club of the Willys-Overland Company come by their position not by birth, but by hard work and sales ability. They are the leading salesmen in the country.

A recent list of the standing of the $100,000 salesmen shows that thirteen out of the Los Angeles organization belong to the "400."

They are listed according to their sales totals as follows: Barr, McGowin, Gerdes, Murphy, Noonan, Robiso, Heidemark, Bird, A. E. Wilson, Rothe, Wyman, Schmidt and Franz.

MOVE INTO NEW QUARTERS

A. W. Crossman, Inc., local distributors for the new Rollin car, have moved into their new and spacious quarters at Twelfth and Figueroa streets and are busy displaying the product of Rollin White at the new place.

The Rollin, introduced at the New York automobile show this year for the first time, has been making a fine showing throughout the country and the demand on the factory for the cars has been heavy. Crossman has been lucky in getting enough cars to take care of most of his demand.

Deliveries of the cars have been keeping up pretty good, he reports, and as a result Los Angeles is being flooded with the new automobile, which comes equipped with four-wheel brakes and balloon tires.

The new location is larger and more centrally located than the temporary one that the concern took while opening up in this territory. The new place is the one that J. V. Baldwin had. It has been entirely rebuilt, however, and is now among the most attractive salesrooms on automobile row.

Both the outside and the interior of the building have been done over. The outside is finished in gray, with the blue signs of the Crossman company showing up for a long distance. The inside is finished in a sort of light brown, in which the new automobiles show to good advantage.

E. W. Mong, manager of retail sales, reports that the demand for the Rollin has not decreased a bit since the introduction of the car here, and the closed models as well as the open ones are selling rapidly. Reports of excellent gasoline mileage and fine results after long trips are being reported daily to the local organization.

PRIVATE CARS IN BIG RUN

Hundred and One Autos Visit Camp Curry in Dash from Stockton

One of the big events of the Yosemite Valley season occurred last week when 101 privately-owned automobiles entered the valley from Stockton as competitors in the annual Stockton-Camp Curry run.

The Camp Curry trophy cup offered in this event was won by the Reo Car Company of California, Inc., and was presented by Mrs. D. A. Curry to Arthur M. Hammond, manager of the Stockton branch of the company.

Of the 101 privately-owned motor cars entered in the run twenty-five were Reos, nine were Dodges and the remainder was distributed among quite a number of makes. Credit for the fine showing made by the Reos on the run was given by Manager Hammond to the individuals owning and entering the cars, whom he said, got behind the idea in Stockton and made such an excellent showing possible.

Before leaving Camp Curry the various automobile dealers and Chamber of Commerce officials stated that they expected to make the event in 1925 an even bigger one and that everyone had promised to help make it so.

J. B. L. Burton, manager of the Santa Monica branch of the Reo Motor Car Company of California, Inc., was present in Camp Curry at the time the Stockton cars arrived and said the string of 101 cars coming in one after the other made a wonderful showing. Burton said he certainly was proud to see the twenty-five Reos lined up in front of the famous Camp Curry gateway when the cup was presented and that the owners were most enthusiastic over their cars and the way they performed on the strenuous trip into the valley.

The Stockton caravan left Camp Curry for home early Monday morning after a Sunday of rest and sight-seeing in the valley.

CANNONBALL BAKER POPS INTO ARENA

Makes Fast Run from Indianapolis to French Lick Springs in Lexington

"Cannon Ball" Baker, internationally known motor car pilot, has popped up in a new spot. This time he made his appearance in Indiana at the wheel of one of the new Lexington Concords.

Details of his record run, when he covered 275 miles from Indianapolis to French Lick Springs traveling at an average rate of 40.74 miles per hour in high gear, have just been received here by Frank Ansted from Herbert L. Clay, sales manager of the Lexington Motor Company, Connersville, Ind.

Baker's actual running time was 6 hours and 45 minutes. His elapsed time was 7 hours and 6 minutes.

The route covered passed over some of the steepest grades in the State, very few of which are mastered in high gear by the average motorist.

The Lexington Concord is reported to have experienced little difficulty in pulling the steepest of the grades in high gear under the guidance of Baker.

Fat Carcasses Announced for Hupmobile Cars

The Greer-Robbins Company announces that balloon tires will be optional equipment at a small extra charge on all the latest series Hupmobiles sold in California. Cars with this equipment are now on display at the concern's showroom, corner of Twelfth and Flower.

To give one of the new touring car models with balloon equipment a real work-out, a Hupmobile manned by five of the company's live-wire salesmen was sent over the road to Big Bear Valley. The hardy crew, under the guidance of Walter DuBois, a Big Bear enthusiast of the deepest dye and owner of a cabin in those piney parts, left Los Angeles last Saturday afternoon and returned late the following evening.

Balloon tires, they assert, add materially to the already well-known easy-riding qualities of the Hup, while on stretches of dusty road and on the grades of the City Creek road they undoubtedly increased traction considerably because of the wider treads. Although the Hup carried five passengers, as well as considerable provender and luggage, it made the round trip with a gasoline average of a trifle better than eighteen miles to the gallon, and no oil nor water were taken on. At no time, it is asserted, did the engine show any signs of boiling.

Four of the party had never been into the valley nor had they ever cast a line. Despite this handicap, three of those landed six big lake trout. DuBois, a veteran fisherman, was unable to get a strike. And last Sunday, when all this occurred, a flock of real fishermen were on the lake and all they got, it is said, was sunburn and an appetite. Aside from the successful Hup-balloon tire demonstration, four city "fellers" have become outdoor bugs and some of their extra cash will be deposited around the sporting goods stores.

Business Coupe Offers Several New Advantages

The Jewett business coupe, a late model brought out by the Paige Detroit Motor Car Company, combines many of the advantages offered by manufacturers of only high-priced motor cars, according to J. M. Sterling, manager of the Paige Company of Southern California, distributor for the Jewett.

The finely proportioned lines of this business car are augmented by the genuine leather upholstering and the midnight blue finish, furnished in combination with the high-bake black enamel hood, fenders and radiator. In the back is a compartment capable of holding a dozen average size sample cases. Inside and immediately behind the seat is another compartment designed especially for a physician's kit or salesman's portfolio. This space is seven inches wide, fourteen inches deep, and thirty-four inches long.

The complete freedom of movement offered by the three-passenger capacity of the coupe is considered another desirable feature. The tallest person may sit upright in this Jewett six model and still have several inches of clearance to the top. The ample leg room and proper seat angle always found in the Jewett makes it possible to travel all day and not become exhausted from having maintained a cramped posture while driving.

Sales Opportunity

The largest motor car dealer in Arizona, located in Phoenix, handling two of the most popular cars on the market, will have a vacancy open for retail salesman today and would like to receive applications from those with records behind them as real go-getters.

This is a permanent situation the year around, carrying regular drawing account as well as offering a connection with one of the oldest and most reliable motor car merchants in the State.

MILTON AND MURPHY ON GUEST LIST

Racers Among Throngs to Visit Marmon Factory at Annual "Open House"

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

INDIANAPOLIS, May 31.—Kings of the open throttle, who have driven to victory and fame behind the wheel of Marmon racing cars in many of the greatest racing classics, were among the thousands of visitors to the mammoth Marmon factory during the week preceding the 500-mile international sweepstakes race held here May 30.

The Nordye & Marmon Co., following the custom of years, held "open house" during the entire week for all visitors to the races. They came from everywhere, and it is estimated by Marmon officials that over 50,000 people inspected the plant and saw Marmon cars in the making during the past six days.

Among the noted drivers who visited the Marmon plant were Barney Oldfield, dean of automobile racing, who for many years drove Marmon cars; Tommy Milton, the only man who has ever repeated a victory in the international sweepstakes 500-mile race at Indianapolis; Jimmy Murphy, who enjoys the distinction of being the sole American ever to win the French Grand Prix race classic; Eddie Hearne, champion race driver, who accompanied his call at the Marmon plant with an order for his ninth Marmon, in which he will drive back to Los Angeles; Joe Boyer, Detroit millionaire and racer, who has won a reputation as one of the most daring pilots in the racing game, staying in the lead or "breaking" in the attempt; Bennett Hill, another driver with a sensational record for hair-raising exploits on the race course.

Novel Hill Climb Staged

No necessity for the Auburn to hunt for a hill to climb when it has a sixteen per cent ramp right at home in the White Auto Co. building. It does it in high at the rate of three to five miles per hour.

Rapid Pace Is Set Over Rough Desert Highway

Calico, an old mining center twenty-one miles from Barstow, was visited last week by a party of five of the Earle C. Anthony, Inc., organization. The 400-mile trip from Los Angeles was made in a Packard six, which averaged seventeen miles to the gallon of gas, and no oil was added.

Fred Graves, Packard six sales manager for the Anthony Company, was a member of the party, and reported that the forty-one miles of desert road between Victorville and Barstow was exceedingly rough, with about six inches of sand and plenty of holes, despite which the smooth-riding Packard at a pace of fifty and fifty-five miles per hour, did not discommode the travelers.

In addition to the interest of the desert country itself, Calico proved itself thoroughly worth while from the standpoint of California mining history. The Calico mine is about forty years old, there are a number of ruins of old buildings and a few relic borax wagons still visible. There is but one family living in Calico, although a few individuals are still getting a little ore out of the mines and are working the tailings.

The mountain itself is very colorful, with a volcanic lava formation of peculiar shapes and crevices. In the sunshine, almost every color in the rainbow is thrown out from the mountain, and also from a wall a couple of hundred feet long, sixty feet high, closely resembling a inarcel wave for its curving propensities. There is a dry lake approximately two miles long, and one mile in width, which is a natural speed course.

SPECIAL STEERING EQUIPMENT USED

MOON ENGINEERS ADOPT ROSS STEERING GEAR ASSEMBLY

When the demand for balloon tires became generally insistent upon the part of motorists all over the country things began to happen in automobile factories. Test pilots, collaborating with engineers and designers found out in short order that the best results for easy handling were obtained from balloon tires by installation of a special steering gear to take care of the extra traction surface these large section tires covered.

The automobile industry moves fast and no one manufacturer has a monopoly on brains and ideas. The special Ross cam and lever steering gear came on the market almost simultaneously with the balloon tires.

Some manufacturers were caught with large inventories of standard steering gear which had to be used up. The Moon factory was fortunate in this respect, accordnig to Don P. Smith, president of Don P. Smith, Inc., Southern California Moon distributors.

"Moon had no large inventory of steering gear equipment, nor did they have a factory full of obsolete steering gear machinery," said Smith.

"When Moon engineers saw that the Ross steering gear assembly was the correct equipment for ballon tires they immediately made arrangements to install it at the factory and as a result Moon owners are ballooning along with easy handling cars."

ARIZONA TO FINISH IMPORTANT ROADS

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

PHOENIX, May 31.—A number of important highways are to be finished in Arizona before the end of summer. One is to be the scenic route from Clifton to Springerville. The Rice-Springerville route is to be put in condition for travel, though not expected to be classed as a boulevard until after expenditure of several hundred thousand dollars of joint national and State funds. Gila county is to begin work at once on the last section of nine miles from Globe to Fossil Creek, this a connection with the road being built by Yavapai county from Camp Verde to secure direct connection between Prescott and Tonto Basin.

Indoor Hill Climb Turns Out Success

An indoor hill-climb is being staged every day at the White Auto Company for the edification of admirers of the Auburn 6-63, and for the purpose of convincing skeptics who have to be shown just what a powerful motor has been put into this new model.

The ramp, which leads from the ground floor of the White Auto Company to the service shops on the second floor is steep. In order to get on it, it is necessary to make a sharp right-angle turn at the bottom.

It is impossible to make this turn at a greater speed than three or four miles per hour, due to the short turning radius permitted by the walls and pillars, according to O. R. Fuller. The grade is 16 per cent by measurements made last week by engineers.

The Auburn 6-63 pulls the ramp in high gear regularly. In fact this is one of the tests each car is put through before it is delivered.

A. J. Morgan was at the wheel of the Auburn when the official indoor hill climb was staged last week. He was the mechanician for Johnson in the economy run.

Johnson said he and Morgan had tried the Auburn 6-36 indoors and outside on every kind of hill and road, and could vouch for its consistent superiority of performance with marked economy.

ALL CARS USED RED CROWN GAS

For the eighth consecutive time, Red Crown gasoline was used exclusively in the cars competing in the annual Los Angeles to Camp Curry, Yosemite National Park, economy run. And to make the laurels won by the Standard Oil Company even more glowing, six of the seven cups awarded in the contest went to cars using Zerolene lubricating oil.

Under the new conditions of the contest that prohibited shutting off the engine while the car was in motion, plus the unusually hot weather, the matter of lubrication played an extremely important part in the attainment of such spectacular economy records of the cars.

When Joe Bozzani piloted the Overland to victory in the Sweepstakes and Class 2, he added nothing to the Standard Oil Company's till, for his car used no oil whatever, the crankcase gauge being at the full mark at the finish, and he took on no oil en route.

A no-oil record for Zerolene also was established by the Overland, driven by R. Bonaccini, winner in Class 1; the Kissel, driven to victory in Class 4 by H. L. Nickelsen and the Oakland touring car, driven by Harry Neville. The Oakland sedan, winner of two cups and driven by A. L. Peterson, used only one pint of Zerolene on the 400-mile trip.

DEVELOPMENT WORK STARTED YEARS AGO

The story of balloon tires as evolved by the engineers of the Miller Rubber Company was related last week by J. O. Ward, special representative of the Miller Rubber Company of California.

"Eight years ago the Miller Rubber Company began a scientific research to develop a stronger and more flexible tire. A very marked degree of success resulted. Three years ago, the company perfected and adopted tires with fewer plies. These tires afford added strength and greater freedom in the flexing action, thus lengthening their life and affording easier riding qualities.

"Out of this has arisen the conception and possibility of the larger section balloon tire for smaller rim diameters and the balloon tire for present rims."

FOUR-WHEEL BRAKES ARE BOOSTED HIGHLY

The new McFarlan six is coming from the factory with four-wheel brakes as standard equipment, according to officials of the Lewis-Hilliard Company, who report that owners are unanimous in their praise of the extra safety feature.

SPEED IN THE CITY IS FATAL

Taxicab Company Makes a Careful Check

Another Case of the Hare and Tortoise

Careful Driving Pays in the Long Run

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE]

CHICAGO, May 26.—"Step on it, driver. I'm in a big hurry," orders one passenger.

"Drive carefully, please. My companion is very nervous," cautions another.

Nine times out of ten, both fares will arrive at a given city destination at the same time, declared Richard E. Kropf, Supreme Regent of the Royal Arcanum, in an address here on "Civic Safety." He insisted that speeding through crowded city streets was highly productive of accidents and cited the exhaustive test made by a large taxicab company to prove that it seldom saved time.

"It is a mistake to believe that the taxi which cuts over, weaves in and out, drives on the wrong side of the street and 'hits it up' in the open stretches gets there first," said Mr. Kropf, who has made a careful study of traffic conditions in connection with the nation-wide campaign of the Royal Arcanum among its 125,000 members. "It is another case of the hare and the tortoise. The reckless driver is caught by the cautious one when traffic is held up at an intersecting street.

"In 1000 test trips which were carefully timed, one of the largest taxicab companies in America demonstrated that the 500 trips which were conducted at a reckless speed, with the drivers taking advantage of every trick known to the craft, effected only an average saving of thirty-nine seconds over 500 trips made under twenty-miles per hour. This time saving is considered insignificant, for the average trip distance covered was six miles. Moreover it is pointed out that in the slower group, every traffic regulation and driving courtesy was carefully observed. Driving carefully pays in the long run."

Harold Wills Sails for a Foreign Tour

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE]

NEW YORK, May 26.—C. Harold Wills, president and general manager of Wills Sainte Claire, Inc., sailed May 17 on the S.S. Majestic to London for a month's business trip in England and France.

Mr. Wills goes to England at the invitation of two of the most widely known metallurgists in the British Empire, who wish to confer with him on several important developments, which Mr. Wills has made in the field of metallurgy.

In English engineering circles Mr. Wills is regarded as one of the foremost engineers and metallurgists in the United States and his development of molybdenum steel has been very widely heralded in the English automotive press.

At the request of the metallurgists and an English automobile manufacturer of world-wide reputation, Mr. Wills is taking a five-passenger sedan over with him for the purpose of demonstrating the superstrength of molybdenum steel, the most outstanding metallurgical achievement in the automobile industry.

While in London Mr. Wills intends to look over the situation with respect to representation of the Wills Sainte Claire in England as the number of inquiries received at the factory indicate the presence of a very profitable market for the Gray Goose.

From England Mr. Wills will go to France, where he will spend a week or ten days in Paris, after which time he will go to Italy to visit some of the Italian automobile plants.

CALAMITY HOWLERS ARE PUT TO ROUT

Back up, calamity howlers! Local business is swimming right along. Gloomy prognostications are decidedly out of order. Witness, just for instance, the encouraging prosperity reported by Clippinger-Kincaid, Inc., "downtown" Chevrolet dealers.

Harrison H. Rhoads, manager of the new car department for this firm, predicts that sale of new cars during the month of May will go well over the century mark.

The used car department reports sales for one week alone of thirty-four cars. W. J. Berger, recently appointed manager of this department, is enthusiastic over results in his field. On May 27, sales amounted to 120 cars for the month.

Ted Herlihy, not to be outdone in the prevailing optimism, reports that a daily average of 119 cars comes under his domain. This exceptional showing, he states, is due to high efficiency of "downtown" Chevrolet service, which is said to be gaining increasing recognition by Angeleno motorists.

SAFETY EDUCATION IN KANSAS CITY SCHOOLS IS SUCCESSFUL

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE]

KANSAS CITY, May 19.—One of the important public safety measures initiated in this city two years ago was the introduction of safety education in the elementary schools. While the idea was first put forth by the Kansas City Safety Council, credit for what has been accomplished is shared equally by school authorities and teachers, public and parochial, for the matter was put squarely up to them and they assisted in its solution.

Junior Safety Councils are now organized in seventy-four of eighty-two available public schools of Kansas City and twenty-one of twenty-three parochial schools. Organized a year and a half ago by the Kansas City Safety Council, their life has been replete with achievement and with heartfelt approbation from parents and teachers alike.

Through the efforts of the education committee of the Kansas City Safety Council, a joint city-wide committee was formed consisting of the assistant superintendent of schools, four school principals, the president of the Parent-teachers' organization, four citizens and the Council's committee on education. A subcommittee was then appointed to work out a plan on safety instruction in the school room. A course of organized safety teaching was presented to a conference of school principals and was accepted with gether with an outline of activities general approval. The plan, to- for the school, was submitted to the Board of Education and approved. The parochial schools adopted the plan for their use and safety made its entrance into the primary school world in Kansas City.

MANY MEMBERS

One thousand seven hundred school children between the ages of 7 and 14 are active members and 10,000 others are associate members of school junior safety councils. The active members are elected semiannually by pupils from each of the fourth, fifth, sixth and seventh-grade rooms. Associate members are pupils in these grades who have given adequate proof that they live up to the safety code of twenty-nine rules drawn up by the Kansas City Safety Council for the guidance of the juniors. Candidates for associate membership must appear before an open meeting of the junior safety council and present proof of their fitness. A two-thirds favorable vote of members present admits them.

Safety insignia is of three types—the small buttons for the associate members, the large button for the active members and the large badge worn by the junior safety patrol members when on duty at dangerous street crossings. The buttons are supplied by the local safety council and may be recalled by the principal for any violation of the safety code or pledge.

Meetings of the active membership—the executive branch—of each junior council are held weekly. Accidents are reported and investigated and violations are taken up. Weekly inspection of school buildings and grounds are made and the report prepared by the principal of the school.

RESPECT THE COPS

Respect for law and order is one fundamental feature of this work. The proper attitude toward regulation by law is thus developed, and the policeman comes to be known for his protective duty rather than for his uniform, his club and his supposedly insatiable desire to put erring youngsters in jail. Nothing better demonstrates the practical value of the junior safety organization in the Kansas City schools than the work of the junior safety patrol.

Pupils, drivers of vehicles and street car men all understand the work of the junior safety patrol and co-operate to every extent.

New features to maintain enthusiasm are constantly being developed by teachers and pupils with the help of the local safety council. Training the young mind along safety lines has reduced minor playground accidents, developed a high morale—is a testimony of a number of school principals and city authorities. It has another by-product equally important from the standpoint of citizenship and behavior.

"The corollary of our safety program," said Assistant Superintendent of Schools George Melchers, "is that as the work has progressed we have had fewer school complaints regarding general conduct; other administrative problems have likewise decreased correspondingly in importance."

HANGS UP MARATHON MARK

How many motorists have driven their cars 400,000 miles without having the motor block rebored? F. G. Gegoux, reclamation engineer in the Blythe flood-control project, has reached that total without having the cylinders of his Ford touched by the reboring machine. His motor is equipped with a special head containing the valves fitted to the original 1913 motor block.

Many notable records have been made by Gegoux and his famous car. His last record was a run from Los Angeles to New York in eight days. That is undoubtedly the fastest time ever made across the continent by a man driving alone in a Ford car.

Other records include a trip in which he drove around the rim of the United States, passing through every border State, in thirty-seven days.

On his record-breaking eight-day trip, he carried a message from the Mayor of Los Angeles to the Mayor of New York City, which he delivered promptly, receiving the Mayor's congratulations on the success of the run.

Here is the telegram which Gegoux sent to the Ventura Refining Company, in which he briefly gave the details of his accomplishment:

"Arrived New York in eight days and six hours official time. Motor never missed a shot and seemed in better shape than when I started, thanks to Ventura oil. Heavy rain and mud through New Mexico, Colorado and Kansas. Finished last 688 miles in twenty-six hours."

Gegoux is a firm believer in dependable lubrication, for he knows a dependable oil means extra thousands of miles from his motor. The exceptional heat-resisting qualities of the Ventura made that brand of paraffin-base oil his invariable choice on his fast trips across the continent.

Hawaii Said to be Bright Spot for Distributor

More than twenty thousand automobiles owned and driven in the Hawiian Islands make this territory a prosperous one for automobile merchants who represent the foremost American automobile manufacturing companies, while good roads, wonderful scenery and a year around temperate climate make motoring at all times a delight, according to J. W. Leavitt, prominent Pacific Coast automobile distributor who has just returned from a visit to our island empire.

Business is good with automobile representatives in the islands according to the automobile men, and American capital is backing many industries which make for prosperity. The sugar industry, which was at one time the financial backbone of the islands is now supplemented by the pineapple canning industry and efforts are being made to establish large fishing canneries.

Mr. Leavitt, who was accompanied by Mrs. Leavitt on the trip, declares that outdoor sports excel in making the Hawiian Islands the greatest vacation land in the world.

TIRE BARON LEAVES FOR A TRIP TO EAST

Mr. Joseph Savenick, president of the Tire Trading Company, accompanied by his wife, left Thursday on a buying trip East. He will keep posted on business conditions in the East while visiting Akron and other large tire manufacturing centers. Mr. Savenick is making this trip especially to select the highest grade tire stocks available, in order to maintain his wide reputation for quality merchandise.

New Cars on Duty in the Yellowstone

When Yellowstone Park opens for the season on June 20, there will be available for tourist travel through the big national playground sixty new White eleven-passenger busses.

The busses have been shipped from the White factory in Cleveland in one great trainload, and is said to be the largest shipment of busses ever made. With the new equipment the Yellowstone Park bus fleet will number 279 Whites, being the second largest bus fleet in the United States.

This summer, like previous summers, will find a large number of Americans spending their vacations on wheels. Motor cars and railroads pour thousands into nature's wonderlands—the national parks. They are "seeing America first"—as nearly a million and a half did during the season of 1923.

WANTS NEW CATALOG

Mr. John Shubert, electrical contractor of Haverstraw, N. Y., asks for a catalog of the 1924 Franklin, stating that at present he is the owner of a 1906 and a 1907 Franklin. The 1906 is in daily service and the 1907 is being overhauled and repainted. Mr. Shubert does all his own work on the car and says that he considers the Franklin the most economical automobile in the world, not only because of low operating expense, but also because he hasn't been able to wear them out.

PAN-AMERICAN TOUR TO BE AN EXPERIMENT IN FRIENDLINESS

BY ROY D. CHAPIN,
Vice-President National Automobile Chamber of Commerce
[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE]

NEW YORK, May 26.—An experiment in neighborliness destined to have a far-reaching effect upon our relations with countries to the south of us, will begin when the Pan-American Highway Commission arrives in this country this month.

The delegation, which is made up of some forty authorities on highway construction, finance and economics from the countries of Pan-America, will stay here practically a month. During that time they will be escorted over the highways of several States and will be given an opportunity to see at first hand road development and transport under climatic and soil conditions closely akin to those in their home lands. The manufacture of motor cars, the fabrication of rubber tires, methods of highway finance, problems of traffic regulation and other diverse activities will be brought under review and the hope is that in this way a complete picture can be obtained of what highway transportation has meant here.

The most striking aspect of the trip is that while it has been financed from contributions from the motor, machinery, rubber, steamship and other industries, the purpose is in no sense an effort to sell the visitors American goods. Instead the highway education board has been asked to take charge of the general arrangements and all of the details have been worked out by that body in co-operation with the State, War, Agriculture, Interior and Commerce departments, the Pan-American Union, Inter-American High Commission, the American Association of State Highway Officials and other agencies of a public nature.

MORE TRANSPORT NEEDED

The impelling theme behind the project is the viewpoint frequently expressed by Pan-Americans that highway transport is certain to become a major element in their systems of communication. In many instances, their rail and water development has not been adequate, consequently a pressing need is felt for further means of penetration into large areas of still undeveloped natural resources.

The rapid growth of motor vehicle use in the United States has forced us to meet new problems face to face in every direction. The public demand which has resulted in the appearance of 15,000,000 motor vehicles on our public highways has created a demand for enormous new facilities in roadbeds, garages and the other accessories to individual transportation. Marked effects on our educational and health systems have been noted. A new field for productive employment of labor has been created. New standards have been brought about in farm and urban life. A need for trained leaders has been disclosed.

KNOW OF DEVELOPMENT

Students of these conditions in Pan-America are fully cognizant of the development which has taken place here. In fact, many of the men who will represent the various countries in the Pan-American Highway Commission are graduates of the finest technical schools of this country and consequently have already seen something of conditions here. Others attended colleges of similar standing in their own or other foreign countries.

What the present visit will do, therefore, will be to afford them a close-up view of the most recent developments which have been effected. Since an official Pan-American motor highway conference is planned for an early date in some Pan-American country, the present survey will offer material for discussion and, in fact, the governing body of the Pan-American Union has designated these men as an official program committee to formulate a suggested outline for the later meeting.

EFFECT OF RELATION

Over and above these aspects, however, is a broader consideration. Foreign relations must inevitably be affected by interchange of thought and opinion. No doubt the visit of the Pan-Americans will be followed by a trip southward on the part of a similar American delegation. Out of these and the consequent development of trade routes within the Pan-American countries, it is hoped will come a closer friendship between the countries of our two continents.

Adequate facilities for communication are of fundamental importance to both the domestic and world progress of nations. It is with these things in mind that the writer has ventured to term the visit of the Pan-Americans a genuine experiment in neighborliness.

The success of the event is already insured by the fine spirit of co-operation which has been shown by the several agencies interested both there and abroad.

A ten-day service in refinishing cars

WITH special equipment that permits the use of ZAPON, it is now possible to completely refinish any automobile in ten days. As a result, the owner has the use of his car two to four weeks sooner than would be possible with ordinary finishing materials.

ZAPON, America's oldest lacquer product, gives a finish so hard and durable that it will withstand the hardest kind of service. Even cleaning mud from it with a dry cloth will not scratch it. Stiff bristle brushes will not harm it. It is proof against the effects of heat—heat that would blister an ordinary finish.

Visit the display rooms of any of the firms listed below and let them show you the many advantages that result from refinishing an old car by this new method. See them about it TODAY.

Here Comes the Hurdy-Gurdy Man

SOME magic day when June comes over the hill to fill the world with joy as old as time, you will hear the muffled notes of songs we used to sing.

The greatest music in the world—the sound of happy children's voices—a hurdy gurdy in a quiet street—a swarthy grinder and a wonder woman with a tambourine.

On such a day, when happy hills are green, step into the Jordan—the car of personality and charm. There lies the thrill that goes with the gallop of a thoroughbred horse.

It is such a good looking car—comfortable in a way that fascinates and never tires—economical as all things of quality must be—reliable to the point of inspiring confidence that is rare.

Punch, speed and performance that allow you to go and go as fast as you dare to drive.

Happy are the people who drive Jordans, at the end of the day's journey, but happier still at the close of a year's companionship.

There is a value in the Jordan which makes it the envy of the people you pass on the road.

There is a value in the Jordan which makes it sought after by those intelligent people who will buy your car after years of service, at a price far above the average paid for any other car in its class.

Only Jordan owners fully realize what I am talking about.

Thousands of others will realize it this year.

FIRST HOOSIER RACE RECALLED

Spectators Came in Buggies and Wagons

Eighty-two Miles Per Hour Rate of Speed

No Paved Roads in Indiana in Those Days

"When I recall the first Indianapolis 500-mile race it makes me realize how fast changes have come about in the world of automobiles. It is only thirteen years since that first contest was staged on the brick oval, but the changes in the automobile industry, and the changes that automobiles have made since then are nothing short of marvellous," said Jack Benell, Haynes distributor for Southern California. Benell, though not then in the automobile business, was an interested spectator not only at the race, but at much of the practice that preceded it, and rode many practice laps with Herb Lytle, one of the most famous of the racing stars of 1911.

"There was hardly a foot of paved road in Indiana in 1911. On the day of the race there were more horses and buggies and wagons parked in the infield than there were automobiles. That first race was the greatest object lesson the farmers of Indiana had ever seen as to the possibilities of the automobile. I believe that first race marked the beginning of a revolution in transportation.

"People who drove their cars 100 or 200 miles to that race considered it a great achievement. It was, too, with the cars and the roads of 1911. The racing cars were not the tiny, terrifically fast creations of today. There was no limit on piston displacement then, and huge four-cylinder motors predominated. Between the vibration from the motors and vibration from the rough brick track, it was a tough race for the drivers.

"The fastest time made in practice, I think was something like eighty-two miles an hour. Of course the track was rebuilt after that first race and made smoother and the turns banked higher. That first race was held on the roughest track an event of the sort was ever staged on. There were no guard rails, no wire fences, and no sand bags, and many a car skidded off the low banked turns with disastrous results.

"But there is no question but that first race centered a tremendous amount of public interest on automobiles. The increasing use of automobiles led to a demand for good roads, and today Indiana has one of the finest road systems in the United States. The speedway that Carl Fisher, Jim Allison and Frank Wheeler built has had far-reaching results in many ways other than the setting of speed records."

New All-Season Highway to Big Bear's Proposed

News of a proposed new route into Bear Valley by way of Hesperia, Doble Canyon and Baldwin Lake was brought back from the valley last week by Jack Benell, Southern California Haynes distributor. Benell, who spent several days in the valley on a fishing trip, declares that the new road would enter the valley at a considerably lower elevation than any of the existing routes, and that it would greatly facilitate winter travel into Big Bear.

"From what I was told in the valley the new road would not only be much freer of snow than the present route by Cushenberry and Johnson grades, but it would be possible to build with much easier grades than the present desert route. The grades are much steeper than they look to the eye on the present road, and the road is not kept in good condition. It is rough and dusty now, and is apparently receiving little maintenance work.

"There should be a good road into the valley from the desert side with grades not to exceed 8 to 10 per cent. The desert route is a most important one, because it is the only passable route for a considerable portion of the year.

"The effect of making the valley a game preserve is becoming evident in the wild life you see. We saw many deer, and the gray squirrels are more numerous this year than I have ever seen them.

"We came out by the new Deep Creek cutoff, which promises to be one of the finest mountain roads in the State. It is in good condition for the most part, but there were several slides near the summit which made narrow and dangerous going.

"Notwithstanding the fact that it was very hot when we went in by way of the desert and that we towed a big car for a mile and a half up Cushenberry Canyon, the Haynes used only three quarts of water on the entire trip, showed no oil consumption, and averaged better than fifteen miles per gallon of gasoline."

MARIE PREVOST TAKES DELIVERY ON SEDAN

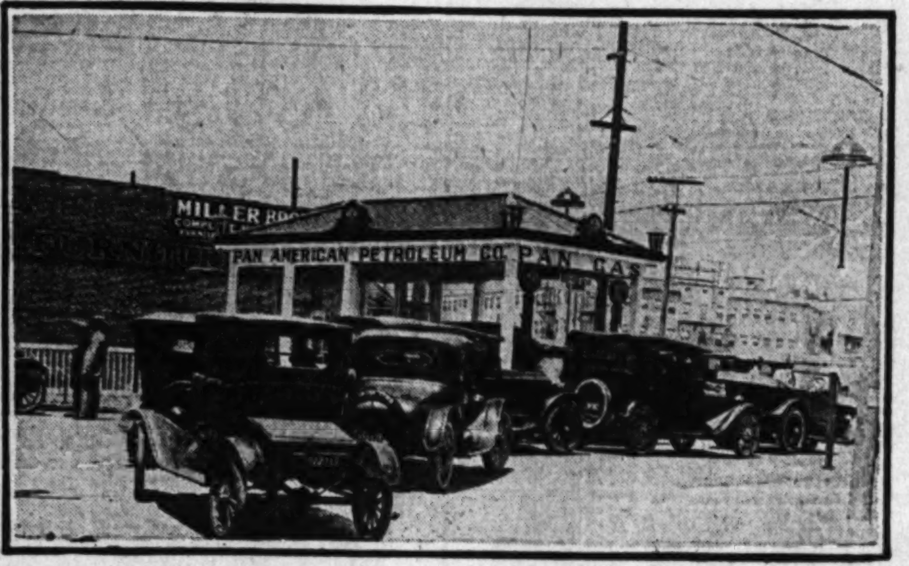
Yes! Business Was Good on Opening Day



Third and Vermont was a busy place when the Pan-Gas Company celebrated its entry into the gas station field

Terrible Rush at Opening of New Stations

When Pan-Gas arrived in Los Angeles it came with a rush. The opening of twenty-one Pan-American Petroleum Company service stations on Saturday was the signal for every motorist within blocks to line up and wait until he could get his gas tank filled.

At several of the stations, notably those at Fifty-fourth and Figueroa, Third and Vermont, North Broadway and Bernard and the one in the downtown district at Eleventh and Hill, the crowds of eager motorists were so great as to cause traffic congestion.

The Pan-Gas station at North Broadway and Bernard, where Hollywood-bound motorists turn off toward Sunset Boulevard, cared for 304 motorists between opening time Saturday morning and 1 o'clock that afternoon. And they were still coming until late that night.

Hangs Up Fast Running Time to Northwest

Forty-four hours is the new record running time between Seattle and Los Angeles.

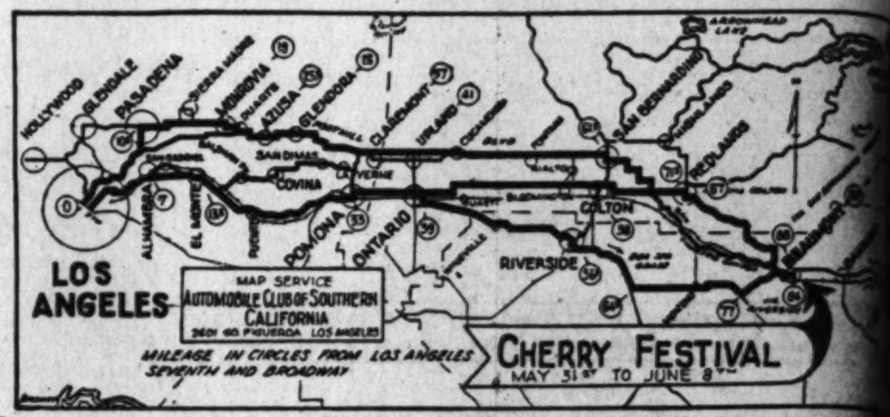
This time, which is believed by automobile men to set a new low record time between the two Coast cities, was recently made by Ralph Van Horn of 204 Twenty-ninth street, Seattle, Wash., in his own Paige automobile.

The story of the run was told by Van Horn to J. M. Sterling, manager of the Paige Company of Southern California, Paige and Jewett distributors, when he arrived here after his sensational run.

According to Van Horn, he was desirous of seeing just how fast he could cover the distance between the two cities and consequently arranged to have his car checked out of Seattle and into Los Angeles. His actual running time on the trip was forty-four hours, while his elapsed time was only forty-nine hours and forty minutes.

"I cannot speak too highly of the speed, power and reliability of the Paige," he asserted. "This car of mine has seen much rough going and has come through with a record of accomplishment that is 100 per cent perfect. Before starting on this trip the Paige had over 40,000 miles on the speedometer and yet I can truthfully state that it came through with a perfect performance record."

How to Reach the Cherry Festival Center



Beaumont's annual cherry festival, May 31 to June 8, will attract thousands of motorists from Southern California. The map, drawn by the map service department of the Auto Club, sh different routes to be followed in reaching the scene of activities.

START CHERRY FESTIVAL

Celebrating the ripening of its most famous crop, Beaumont announces its sixth annual Cherry Festival this year from May 31 to June 8. Open house will be kept and the community invites residents and visitors in California to visit the exhibits, enjoy the entertainments, and utilize the camping facilities.

In former years a Cherry Day was held, but this annual festival has become so popular, and motor travel so heavy that the celebration will be extended over a full week.

The accompanying map shows the main roads leading to Beaumont.

DO WELL ABROAD

The Velie Motors Corporation, Moline, Ill., reports a big increase in foreign sales. During the first four months of this year the company sold 100 per cent more cars at export than during the entire twelve months of last year. The biggest demand, it is said, is in the Argentine and in Australia.

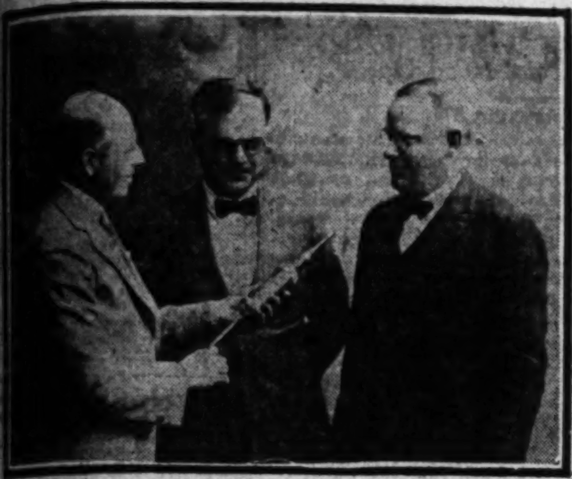
It's All About a Little Gun



And the name of it is the Zerk high pressure gun in the hands of E. H. Kron, western representative of the Allyne-Zerk Company. In center is C. A. "Shorty" Roesch, manager of the Alemite Lubricator Company of California, and on the right is R. W. Foyle, manager of the San Francisco establishment of the Statewide concern. Announcement has just been made that the Bassick Alemite Corporation of Chicago has purchased the Allyne-Zerk Company of Cleveland, O., and that the Zerk product will be merchandised in California along with Alemite products of the Alemite Lubricator Company.

Zerk Company Is Purchased by Bassicks

Announcement was made here yesterday through officials of the Alemite Lubricator Company of California to the effect that the Bassick Alemite Corporation of Chicago, manufacturers of the Alemite products, had purchased the Allyne-Zerk Company of Cleveland, O., manufacturers and distributors of the Zerk Lubrication System, adopted as standard equipment o nmany well-known makes of motor cars and trucks.

The announcement was also made that the Alemite Lubricator Company of California would immediately arrange its service and distribution facilities in that State to handle the Zerk system in connection with the Alemite products. Executives of the Alemite Lubricator Company of California have been meeting with E. H. Kron, western representative of the Allyn-Zerk Company, during the past week and arranging for an uninterrupted service for users of the Zerk and Alemite systems.

C. A. Roesch, president of the Alemite Lubricator Company and R. W. Foyle, manager of the San Francisco establishment of the Statewide concern, state that future expansion plans will be announced in the near future.

The fundamental difference between the Zerk lubrication system and other systems of gun lubrication is that no coupling is required. The grease is simply compressed in the gun by giving a half-turn to the handle and then the nozzle of the gun is pressed against the nipple on the bearing. The pressure does the rest. Instantly and automatically a leak-proof contact is made and grease or oil is shot into the bearing at a pressure of 1000 pounds per square inch.

Among the automobiles and trucks on which Zerk is already equipment according to Foyle, are the following: Reo, Dodge, Maxwell, Jewett, Paige, Chalmers, Chrysler, Rollins, Oakland, Liberty, Dort, Columbia, Locomobile, Pierce Arrow, Chandler and Rickenbacker.

POPULAR IN AUSTRALIA

Reports from the export department of the Reo Motor Car Company at Lansing are to the effect that Australia, the Canary Islands and the African West Coast show a strong demand for Reos. The Reo Speedwagon is becoming more popular in England, Sweden and Mexico, as based upon shipping volume, while a distributor has been appointed to handle Reo interests in Brazil, with branches at Rio Janeiro and Sao Paulo.

BANNER WEEK

The last week in May proved the banner week in the month for the Reo Motor Car Company of California, Inc., according to officials of the firm. Both Speed-wagon and passenger-car sales showed a decided jump and wholesale orders also came in above normal.

Carburetor Troubles and How to Prevent Them

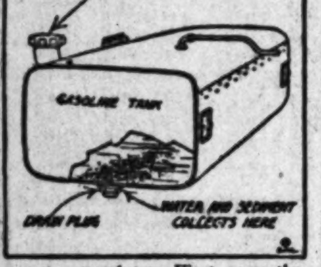
The modern automobile is practically trouble proof and will rarely give any trouble at all if it is given a little care and attention at the proper time.

Most automobile owners drive up to the filling station and trust to the strainers on the filling station pump to prevent any water or dirt entering the gasoline tank. It is almost impossible, however, to prevent a certain amount of dirt and water getting into the tank, even although the gasoline is carefully strained. The car manufacturers recognize this, and provide drain plugs and strainers at various points to trap the sediment and prevent it reaching the carburetor where it can cause lots of trouble. Even with these precautions, however, it is a fact that water and grit do sometimes get through these screens and cause trouble.

If you are unlucky enough to get some water in the carburetor, your experience will be something like this—You may be driving along the road when all at once your engine will stop firing for a few seconds then suddenly start again, and at the same moment you may hear a violent explosion in the muffler. You stop and look around but apparently find nothing wrong and start off, when the same thing happens again, or the engine may stop altogether. Now if you ever do have this experience, you can blame no one but yourself, for this kind of trouble can be avoided very easily by cleaning and draining out the gasoline system three or four times a year.

If grit or dirt gets into the gasoline, it may put the vacuum tank out of order or cause trouble in the carburetor. Suppose you are going along the road, then all at once the engine starts to misfire and you hear the carburetor popping back. The trouble may be due to a small particle of grit in the jet of the carburetor. If a piece of grit the size of a pin head gets into the jet it will block it up completely and cause the engine to stop altogether.

I have given you just a few of the troubles you may have if you do not clean out the gasoline system now and again. It is not a difficult operation, and should not take more than half an hour on the average car.

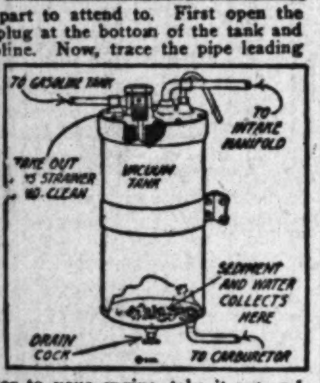


SEE THAT HOLE IN FILLER CAP IS CLEAR
GASOLINE TANK
DRAIN PLUG
WATER AND SEDIMENT COLLECTS HERE

Start at the gasoline tank. First, remove the filler cap and examine the hole in it. If this gets blocked up a vacuum will be created as the gasoline is drawn out of the tank and it will be impossible to draw any gasoline out of the tank even although it is half full of gasoline. Make sure therefore, that the hole is clear.

Next take out the drain plug or open up the sediment trap at the bottom of the tank and draw off about half a pint of gasoline. This will remove any sediment or water that may have collected at this point.

The Vacuum Tank is the next part to attend to. First open the drain cock or screw out the drain plug at the bottom of the tank and draw off about half a pint of gasoline. Now, trace the pipe leading from the tank at the rear to the top of the vacuum tank. Unscrew the connection here and disconnect the pipe from the vacuum tank. Now, unscrew the fitting on the vacuum tank to which the pipe was attached and you will find a strainer. See that it is clear. When you have replaced the strainer and gasoline pipe, test to see that all connections are tight.



Now we come to the carburetor. Be CAREFUL. Whatever you do, do NOT alter any adjustments unless you thoroughly understand what you are doing. Most carburetors have a strainer where the gasoline enters the carburetor. If there is one fitted on the carburetor to your engine, take it out and see that it is clear.

Just a word about connections. When replacing any connection, be very careful to see that you do not cross thread it or draw it up too tight, or it will leak. If you find the connection is difficult to turn after you have screwed it up once or twice, unscrew and make sure that the threads are not crossed.

When you have cleaned out the gasoline system as described, the gasoline will flow through to the carburetor freely and everything is ready to adjust and tune up the carburetor itself. This operation will be described in detail next week.

Smartness Is Credited to Auto Buyers

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE]

DETROIT, May 31.—"I really believe that the average buyer is better informed on automobile values than on any other commodity he uses," declares Capt. E. V. Rickenbacker, vice-president of the Rickenbacker Motor Company.

"This is due to the fact that we in this industry have always featured technical points and kept the buyer remarkably well informed on all advances in the science, improvements of materials and in manufacturing process. Also from the inception of the industry we have all quoted prices.

"So the automobile buyer has always had a definite standard by which to compare and judge the different cars that were offered to him. If he studies the literature of each maker he can ascertain just how the car is made, just the quality of materials that go into it, and any intelligent man can, by going thoroughly into these matters, ascertain just what is the relative cost of production of each car he is offered.

"Then by comparing the selling prices he can determine just what value he is getting in each for his money. And he will generally find he gets just what he pays for."

FAIR LADIES SHOW 'EM HOW TO GO TO BED

Every night just at dusk, or thereabouts on the corner of Pico and Grand, two fair campers appear in the windows of the S. G. Stephens Company and proceed to prepare for bed.

Their comfy cot is an Overland three-door coupe-sedan. The one that has adjustable and removable seats and upholstery, and the economical engine that obtained nearly thirty miles to the gallon of gasolene on the Camp Cury Economy Run recently.

Clifford L. Turner, salesmanager, is the lucky chap who is in charge of the demonstration. Jean Campbell and Helen Ardis are the attractive demonstrators. They make their entrance in outing togs and with no apparent concern for the swarm of spectators outside, they prepare their cozy camp, convert their snug Overland closed car into a roomy, comfortable bed, and change into their silk mandarin pajamas for the night.

BALLOON TIRE QUOTATION UP

Firestone Factory is to Increase Production

Fat Casings on the Long End of Proportion

Seventy-five Per Cent is the New Percentage

That the 60 per cent balloon-tire production of the Firestone Tire and Rubber Company's factory at Akron will be increased within less than a year to a ratio of 75-25 with the "corpulent casings" on the long end of the percentage, was the news brought back to Los Angeles from Akron last week by Elmer S. Firestone.

Mr. Firestone, manager of the Southern California branch with headquarters here, and brother of Harvey Firestone, president and general manager of the huge tire company that bears his name, has just returned from a two-week visit to America's capital city of "auto shoe" production.

ANNUAL MEET

The occasion was the annual conclave of Firestone salesmen from all parts of the United States and Mr. Firestone of Los Angeles, together with sixteen salesmen from this branch, traveled in genuine de luxe style, via special train.

Special trains, however, were as common at the convention as flivvers at a State society picnic, according to the branch manager, and, being driven right into the tracked grounds of the Firestone plant, were parked at the factory doors. There were trains from New York, the Middle West, the South and various other Firestone branch headquarters throughout the United States.

STAGE "BLOWOUT"

The California contingent enjoyed a four-day convention during which the utmost enthusiasm prevailed and the salesmen not only "pointed with pride" to accomplishments on the Pacific Coast during the last annum, but "viewed without alarm" the future fiscal year. The piece de resistance of the tire pow-wow was a big "blowout" in the form of an elaborate banquet at which 600 enjoyed a feast of festive food and optimistic oratory.

"The factory is working night and day, owing to the demand for Firestone gum-dipped balloon cords," Mr. Firestone said yesterday, "and molds, cores and other machinery being rushed in installation in order that the orders may be promptly met and the ratio of balloons to standards increased."

He added it was disclosed at the conclave that out of fifty-two automobile manufacturers of America that have standardized on balloon cord tires, thirty-five are being served by Firestone.

Ince studios at Culver City, taken in the studio grounds. Mrs. Newman is standing, and Mr. Newman is at the wheel of the Firestone balloon-tired Nash.

DRIVING IN TRAFFIC A GAME OF SKILL

Driving through traffic may be likened to the playing of a game, according to Clair R. Savage. And like all sports or games of skill, the sales manager of the local establishment of J. W. Leavitt and Company, Oldsmobile distributors throughout California, it's an excellent mental stimulant and developer. Mr. Savage believes that if more drivers would look at it this way there would be better driving and fewer accidents, simply because safety follows confidence. "This confidence develops from viewing one's driving as a game," he says. "The motorist loses his fear of congestion in his eagerness to demonstrate his skill."

BOOST WIDE BOULEVARD

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE]

CHATSWORTH PARK, May 31. With dreams of converting Chatsworth Drive into a well-paved 100-foot boulevard from the valley's west end to the foothills via San Fernando and on to Pasadena and beyond, the Chamber of Commerce is taking the initiative in consolidating valley enthusiasts in encouraging Los Angeles to go ahead with the long-discussed project.

The continuation of the drive to the Coast through Santa Susana Pass gives valley residents their short-cut to the seaside, where year after year the resorts are being more generously frequented by summer outing parties that would avoid the congestion of the highways leading to the more densely populated southern beaches. The San Fernando-Pasadena State highway via Sunland to the Glendale and Pasadena sections connecting at San Fernando with the Chatsworth Drive completes the circuit and affords one of the most attractive scenic boulevards in the Southland.

These are among the arguments being brought forth in support of the appeal for the boulevarding of the drive through the fig farms, poultry colonies, citrus orchards and gardens that are being developed in proximity to the foothills along the southern slopes of the mountains that defend the valley against the chill north winds.

KEEP THINGS GOING

Franklin dealers in Canada, despite the heavy import duty, are doing a good business. Witness the fact that Bill's Motor Service, Ltd., of Moose Jaw, Sask., ordered immediate shipment of three Franklin demisedans with special equipment. One of these was purchased by Mr. Thomas Miller, editor of the Moose Jaw Times and Herald; another by Dr. J. W. McCulloch, and the third by Chief of Police W. P. Johnston. Each of these deals took in a McLaughlin.

PREFERS MOTORING IN THE SOUTHLAND

EASTERNER OF FLYING NOTE RENOUNCES PLANE FOR MOTOR CAR HERE

Flying is preferable to motoring in some of the eastern and southern States where the condition of the unpaved highways makes aviation a pleasure. But here in Southern California, where the entire section is a network of smoothly paved roads, why aviate when one in a big easy-running sedan, equipped with balloon tires, may roll everywhere in airy road comfort without even the worry from an air pocket.

That, according to officials of the Troy Motor Sales Company, Nash and LaFayette distributors, was something of the thought expressed by Edwin deB. Newman, newly appointed business manager for the Thomas H. Ince studios of Culver City, when, arriving in Los Angeles, he proceeded at once to purchase a new Nash Special Six sedan.

Mr. Newman, who is a veteran devotee of aviation—having flown in the East as a hobby, and also having been one of the pioneers in the development of commercial aviation—had his Nash equipped with Firestone gum-dipped balloon tires in order that the exceptional riding comfort of the big enclosed Nash might even be augmented by the low pressure "fat" casings.

"This is not my first Nash," the motion-picture official told Robert S. Breyer, vice-president and general manager of the Troy Motor Sales Company. "I have owned Nash cars before and they have always given be the best of satisfaction—hence, 'another Nash,' as you say on your tire covers."

HIGH AND LOW PEERING FOR SQUEAKS RELATED

Got your car insured against squeaks? Oh yes, it can be done, in fact, is being done right along at the three McBryde Lubricating stations here.

When a patron subscribes to the much-discussed 12,000-mile service agreement, now being offered by McBryde, he is assured that if he brings his car in every 500 miles for lubricating and tightening, that he will enjoy perfect freedom from all ordinary mechanical troubles and noisesome squeaking. McBryde gives a guarantee to replace any mechanical part that goes wrong from lack of lubrication while a car is under his care and the owner is invited to bring his car in as often as necessary until all squeaks are traced to their sources and silenced. The only exception McBryde makes to the latter provision is in the case of a squeak arising from an imperfect or entirely outworn mechanical part. In such a case the remedy would be outside his province.

Hunting squeaks and administering knockout drops (of oil) are quite serious procedures at McBryde's stations, according to those who have observed them. While a car is on the rack undergoing its general oiling and greasing all likely sources of squeaks are attended to, it is said, and the workers repeatedly stand on the running board and sway the car from side to side to evoke any hidden squeaks that may lurk in its mechanism or chassis.

SAN FERNANDO TO CURB CAR PARKING

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE]

SAN FERNANDO, May 31.—From the time that the padres of old founded the mission in honor of St. Ferdinand down to this day the city has had no law regulating the parking of automobiles on business streets; but this is about to be changed. The City Trustees are about to adopt an ordinance placing a two-hour limit on Porter avenue and several of the other more prominent business streets. The purpose of the enactment is that space may be available for tourists and shoppers, the spaces now being utilized for the most part by home owned machines that pre-empt the available space from early morn till dewy eve.

PROMISE NEW ROAD TO TONTO BASIN

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

GLOBE (Ariz.) May 31.—The far-famed Pleasant Valley, renowned as the locality of the Tonto Basin war and lately celebrated by a modern novel and on the screen, this summer will be of ready access to motorists over a new road that is being constructed from McFadden Peak, in the Sierra Anchas, northward. This new road will lead as far as the great rim of the Mogollon Mountains, which may be traversed next year by a continuation of the highway, which eventually is expected to offer a direct route between Globe or Phoenix and Holbrook on the Old Trails Highway.

SPECIAL WINDOW DISPLAY IS KEEN

Prominent among the activities of local business men to further the "Buy in Los Angeles" movement is the interesting and extensive window display of Hamlin W. Nerney, Inc., the authorized Ford dealer at Fifty-second street and Vermont avenue, of Ford specialties and accessories that are all manufactured right here in Los Angeles. Included in the display are such articles as bumpers, spotlights, mirrors, seat covers, tires, stop lights, accelerators and many others, in addition to the Ford car itself, which is assembled and almost completely manufactured in the big Los Angeles plant.

SPEEDS IN OAKLAND

"Arthur Chevrolet, veteran automobile builder and race driver, recently piloted a stock Oakland six touring car around the Indianapolis Speedway at a speed of seventy miles an hour," says Reeve Gartzmann, president of the California Oakland Motor Company, "and then applied the four-wheel brakes, bringing the car to a fast stop in a short distance in utmost safety."

OAKLAND WINS

The Tucucaya-Le Cima Hill climb in Mexico, staged by the periodical El Automovil en Mexico, brought out a big list of entries, and the Oakland six won its class by covering the steep, dangerous course in 26 minutes, 11 4-5 seconds, according to H. E. Franklin of the California Oakland Motor Company.

FLOCKING TO YOSEMITE

Motorists are Entering Valley in Increasing Numbers Every Day; Glacier Point Road Opens

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

YOSEMITE NATIONAL PARK, May 31.—Travel by all means to Yosemite National Park is showing a daily increase. The Wawona Road entering the park from the south is in excellent condition throughout. On May 17 travel over this route broke all previous records for this season of the year when seventy-eight private automobiles carrying 276 people entered the park. Another interesting comparison is total travel to the park for the same day in 1923, amounted to 285 persons, while this year 546 visitors came to Yosemite on May 17. These figures furnish sufficient foundation for the prospects of another banner year in Yosemite National Park.

With the Big Oak Flat Road, connecting with the park from the north, opened weeks earlier than ever before recorded, it is proving popular to motorists from all over the State and particularly those coming from Modesto and points north, who are urged to utilise this historic highway through the famous Bret Harte country. Each year finds an increased tendency among the park visitors to come in one road and go out the other, thus viewing a marked variety of Sierra scenery. This arrangements makes the trip one of unceasing interest from start to finish.

All roads in the Mariposa Grove of Big Trees are in good repair after an extensive visit in that region by a government road crew. Both the upper and lower groves, Wawona Point, and the Wawona Tree are easily accessible to visitors, who are making daily pilgrimages to the "Land of the Living Forest Giants" by private automobiles and stages.

OPENS EARLY

The Glacier Point Road opened officially on May 23, the earliest known date since the advent of automobiles into Yosemite National Park. Motorists entering the park from this time on, may enjoy the refreshing drive to the majestic point, through a land of many green meadows that are soon to be filled with a profusion of scented wild flowers. The long and short trails are accessible to horsemen and hikers. Visitors to the Point can now secure accommodations at the Glacier Point Hotel, which likewise opened on May 23.

A stunt automobile succeeded in crossing the Tioga Road after shoveling snow for ten days between the eastern and western park boundaries. At this time motorists are urged not to attempt a similar trip if they desire to avoid difficulties that always exist before the government crew has had an opportunity to condition the road following the damage done by winter storms. An official announcement will be issued by the Sperintendent of the Park when the Tioga Road is considered sufficiently qualified to permit automobile travel.

Hundreds of campers are to be found occupying the spacious, free public camp grounds located in Yosemite Valley. These areas are equipped with modern sanitary facilities. Government employees supervise the camping spaces and every endeavor is made to make the visitor's stay a real vacation. Weather conditions continue ideal throughout the park—with clear, balmy spring days followed by cool crisp evenings.

Yosemite Lodge opened May 20, as host to a convention of 350 persons, the first assemblage of this type in the park for the season of 1924.

FREE SERVICE

The free Nature Guide Service operated by the National Park Service in co-operation with the State Fish and Game Commission will commence its nature study trips and evening camp fire talks at the different resorts on June 1. Park visitors will welcome the return of Dr. H. C. Bryant of the California Fish and Game Commission, who will supervise the Nature Guide Service, directing the work of Park Naturalist C. P. Russell and a corps of assistants. Regular office hours will be maintained throughout the summer in the museum, where questions concerning the natural history, geology, and toography of the park will be answered authoritatively by the naturalist in charge. In addition, daily field trips will be made at stated times from the various camps and hotels.

The University of California extension division will conduct a series of free lectures in Yosemite National Park during the months of June and July at the Le Conte Memorial Lodge and the Government Pavilion, both being located in Yosemite Valley. The program arranged is in honor of Joseph Le Conte, who was a distinguished scientist, naturalist and geologist, with a particular love for Yosemite's wonderland.

TUTTLE AND BROWNING TRIP TO THE FACTORY

BUICK ORGANIZATION IS MINUS PRESENCE OF TWO OF ITS BIG ACES

H. W. Tuttle, assistant general manager of the Howard Automobile Company, local Buick distributors, and Joe Browning, general sales manager for the same company, left here last week on a trip to the giant Buick factory at Flint, Mich.

Tuttle is combining business and pleasure and will take a vacation tour to some of the eastern resorts after his visit to the Buick plant. Browning will be gone about two weeks, but Tuttle, who is accompanied by Mrs. Tuttle, will not return to Los Angeles until the second week in July.

At the factory both Tuttle and Browning will go into annual conference with President Bassett and other officials of the big Buick organization.

CHRYSLER SIX

Obtained Hitherto Unrealized Results

A 30-Day Showing of a Chrysler Six Cut-Out Chassis

A cut-out chassis of the new Chrysler Six is now on exhibition in our showrooms.

It is a graphic revelation of the Chrysler engineering and the Chrysler construction that give results never before achieved.

It will enable you to see at a glance the fascinating mechanism that lies under the hood and beneath the body of the car that is destined to change the whole course of motor car design.

The Chrysler Six cut-out chassis will be on exhibition only 30 days. Therefore do no delay your visit.

When you examine it you will get first hand information about the following remarkable features:

An engine only 3-inch bore by 4¾-in. stroke that delivers 68 horsepower, a top speed well over 70 miles and a gasoline economy safely 20 miles to the gallon.

A new perfection of gas distribution, special combustion chambers, scientific heat distribution which results in a flashing pick-up that is electrifying.

Chrysler-Lockheed four-wheel brakes, with perfect hydraulic equalization, so that your car is always under control.

The new type of spring mounting, with springs close to the hubs and parallel to the wheels, making it possible to drive the Chrysler Six around turns at 50 miles an hour and eliminating sideway and road weaving.

Remember, the stay of the Chrysler Six cut-out chassis in Los Angeles is limited to 30 days.

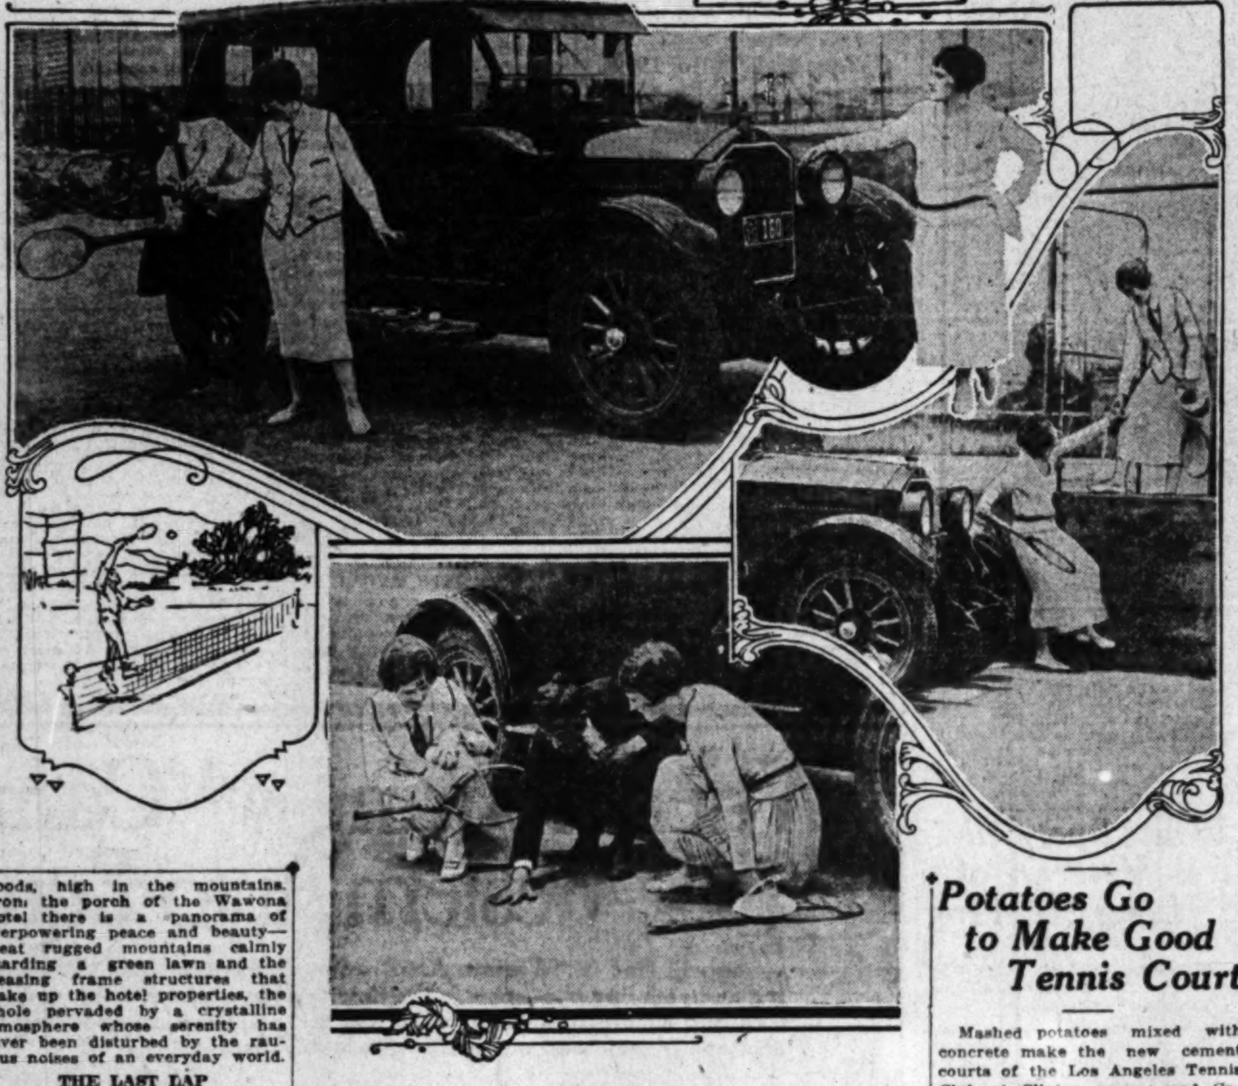
On the Championship Court of the L. A. Tennis Club



One of the best hard courts in the country is that just completed at the Los Angeles Tennis Club at the intersection of Melrose and Cole avenues. It has a so-called "velvet finish," acquired by the judicious use of mashed potatoes in the surface mixture. Above we have Harvey Snodgrass, Southern California net champ, demonstrating to a fair one of the species the proper method of surrounding a racket with one's paw. Betty Carter and Mildred Lieberman, of the B. H. Dyas sport shop, are the racket students. A Stearns-Knight from the Lynn C. Buxton Company is the car in the limelight.

ROAD SCENERY POINTED OUT

Four Laps Between Here and Yosemite Valley

Each One Offers a Variety of Pleasant Charms

Detailed Description for Motoring Public

BY J. A. C. WATERS,
Manager Camp Curry economy run

Many observers on the recent Los Angeles-Camp Curry economy run expressed great surprise at the excellent touring conditions prevailing throughout the entire route between Los Angeles and the famous Yosemite resort. They had somehow been under the mistaken impression that part of the trip, the part between Los Angeles and Fresno, was without scenic attractions and made under forbidding hazards of weather and road. Inasmuch as a similar misconception of this splendid trip may exist in the minds of other Southern California motorists it would seem that a detailed description of road conditions and the scenic delights which the trip affords would be highly in order.

FOUR LAPS

For the sake of convenience we may divide the northern jaunt into four laps—Bakersfield, Fresno, Wawona and Camp Curry. Leaving Los Angeles in the morning and spending the first night in Fresno, the motorist can reach Camp Curry easily by late afternoon of the second day.

From Los Angeles to Bakersfield over the Ridge Route, a distance of 111 miles, the motorist is treated to one of the most famous scenic drives in the world—mile after mile of twisting, looping, ribbon-like pavement that leads to the dizziest heights of the tree-clad mountains and then finds a swift descent on the other side. Bakersfield offers the auto traveler cool resting places and makes a specialty of cooling drinks. The hotels are hospitable and modern.

From Bakersfield to Fresno the way is a distinct contrast from that previously described. For 100 miles or more the motorist passes through a country level as a Texas prairie. Fig orchards, peach orchards and acre after acre of fragrant alfalfa fringe the road. Fresno is a thriving, cheerful city and, like its sister city, Bakersfield, holds out open arms to the motor tourist. First-class hotel accommodations are available there and there are pleasant civic auto camps.

LEAVE EARLY

The wise motorist leaves Fresno early next morning and flees swiftly over a paved highway to the cooler altitudes of the Sierra foothills before Old Sol has a chance to be fully about his day's doing. A dirt road takes up the journey into the foothills, not as smooth going as the paved highway previously traveled, but a good road nevertheless. The traveler now pilots his car through a pleasing hill country of [illegible] hues and picturesque [illegible] trees. By noon, if he keeps a steady pace, he will arrive at Wawona, which is in the heart of pine woods, high in the mountains. From the porch of the Wawona Hotel there is a panorama of overpowering peace and beauty—great rugged mountains calmly guarding a green lawn and the pleasing frame structures that make up the hotel properties, the whole pervaded by a crystalline atmosphere whose serenity has never been disturbed by the raucous noises of an everyday world.

THE LAST LAP

Leaving Wawona the motorist takes up what is to many the most thrilling and scenically satisfying portion of the whole trip—the ascent over the winding grades to Inspiration Point. A few miles from Wawona the road pierces the confines of the Yosemite National Park. Characteristic scenic delights unfold themselves in swift succession. The trees become more majestic, distances become more mysterious and colorful and evidences of wild animal life become increasingly apparent. The great numbers of deer, squirrels, bears and other animals in the park are one of its chief attractions for the vacationist from the city. The trip from Wawona to Inspiration Point seldom fails to yield an occasional glimpse of deer grazing near the road, and for the sharp eyes there are many smaller animals to be seen.

Inspiration Point is just what its name conveys—an awe-inspiring height from which the imaginative soul can drink to the full of unsurpassable scenic grandeur. From this vantage spot practically the whole valley is visible. One glance takes in Bridal Veil Falls, towering Half Dome, El Capitan and other glories.

One more half-hour of driving down the well-graded one-way road into the valley and the motorist has reached his destination, Camp Curry, the warmth of the friendly personal welcome given every arrival, a refreshing bath, a hearty dinner, an evening of royal entertainment near the camp fire and a night of blissful slumber fraught with dreams of the glories promised for the morrow!

HIGH AVERAGE

W. W. Holmes, who recently took delivery on a five-passenger Peerless six sedan from Stanley W. Smith, Inc., drove the new car off the floor and on a trial spin averaged twenty and two-tenths miles to the gallon of gasoline prior to leaving his final order for it.

Pathfinding in Mexico is a Tough "Job"

Motor pathfinding in Mexico is no week-end vacation, according to Willard P. Hawley, wealthy young paper manufacturer of Portland, Or., who passed through this city a few days after completing what is declared to be the first round-trip to Mexico City by automobile. One or two automobiles reached Mexico City in earlier years, but it is declared that none ever returned under its own power, and so young Hawley is claiming a record for his 1924 four-wheel brake Buick.

Besides Hawley the party included a Portland newspaper man, a mechanic and a news reel photographer. Hawley, who has more money than Carter has pills, started out from Portland over two months ago, determined to conquer all Mexican pitfalls and secure road information that would be invaluable to others who might desire to follow his footsteps.

In his report to Howard Automobile Company officials, Hawley stated that after leaving the American border the party entered into a constant battle against mud, rocks, mountains, sand, water and blinding dust storms. Miles were made down flowing river beds and the Buick was driven over boulder-strewn hills showing grades of 35 per cent. The car was greeted with much interest along the entire route, it being the first automobile many of the natives had ever seen. The party was cordially welcomed by Mexico City officials, and President Obregon and family spent an hour listening to a story told by the intrepid drivers about their trip.

Hawley declared that the trip was the most grueling test given an automobile he had ever seen. "We selected the Buick," he said, "on the strength of its performance in our home city of Portland. Suffice it to say that no car could have done more."

Travel Jump Indicated by Foster Curry

With the cessation of over anxiety caused by the foot-and-mouth disease scare—a general fright which threatened for a time to develop into a hysteria—the motoring public of Southern California is once more taking to the open road.

This was the statement made last week by Foster Curry, "mine host" of Lebec Lodge on the Ridge Route, celebrated stopping-place for automobilists on the concrete highway of 1100 turns.

Since the business at a wayside inn specializing in motor trade is a true barometer of the touring conditions, Mr. Curry believes that the increase shown in guests at the lodge during the last fortnight over May, indicates that the autoist no longer is delaying that trip but is taking to the mountains for all the enjoyment that California offers at this season.

LINK PHOENIX AND PRESCOTT

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH]

PRESCOTT (Ariz.) May 31.—In this city has been held a conference between political and commercial representatives of Maricopa and Yavapai counties, especially with consideration of road construction, uniting the cities of Phoenix and Prescott. Decision has been made by the State authorities to build the main highway around by Wickenburg, as giving lower grades and affording an alternative route toward California from both citie

Potatoes Go to Make Good Tennis Court

Mashed potatoes mixed with concrete make the new cement courts of the Los Angeles Tennis Club at Clinton avenue and Cahuenga Boulevard, the finest in the land.

This astounding statement was made, seriously, by H. K. Koebig of the Clark Cement and Concrete Construction Company, installers of the courts, when an inspection party in a Stearns-Knight four sedan from the Lynn C. Buxton company visited the new courts yesterday.

Seventy pounds of raw Irish potatoes were actually used in constructing these new courts under a basic patent awarded W. A. Clarke and H. K. Koebig, proprietors of the company known as the "Potato System," for making concrete joints that will take care of expansion and contraction caused by the vagaries of the weather.

The new championship court, just completed, is laid out in two huge single slabs of reinforced concrete joined at the net line by the "Potato System." The total area of the court is 80x130, and the two slabs are said to be the largest pieces of cement tennis court work ever laid without joints or markings of any sort.

The new court was given its first tryout by Harvey Snodgrass, Southern California tennis champion, and ninth in rank for championship honors in the United States. His fair adversaries across the net were Betty Carter and Mildred Lieberman, clever amateur racqueteers from the Ville-de-Paris, B. H. Dyas Company.

The actual installation for the championship court required only forty-eight hours, Koebig said. Four crews of men working day and night cast these huge slabs into one solid Monolithic stone.

All finishing was done at night in order to produce the peculiar velvet finish that gives these courts a national reputation among champion tennis players.

Four other new courts were installed during the laying out of the new tennis grounds of the club. Eight courts were built by Clarke and Koebig for the club some years ago and Snodgrass with other tennis champions pronounced them the finest they had ever played upon.

Supremacy in Sales Is Kept at Top Notch

Repeating the performance of the three previous months of this year, the 1924 Chandler maintained its sales supremacy during May by outselling every other make sedan in Los Angeles and Hollywood, regardless of price, except Ford and Chevrolet.

"For the fourth consecutive month this year Chandler has continued in this leadership," state officials of the W. P. Herbert Company, Chandler distributors for Southern California, "proof positive of the enviable popularity that the car has attained.

"In addition, Chandler sales in Southern California increased 51 per cent during the first four months of 1924, compared with a similar period last year. This year is, indeed, a wonderful accomplishment when it is considered that the total sales of all makes of cars combined showed a loss of 14 per cent during this time.

"Heretofore there have been several outstanding features that have resulted in Chandler popularity, as witness the famous Pikes Peak motor, traffic transmission and indestructibe rear axle. Now comes the addition of four-wheel brakes on all Chandler models as optional equipment, and there is every reason to believe that Chandler sales will take on an added increase during the months ahead.

"Like the Pikes Peak motor and the traffic transmission, Chandler four-wheel brakes are Chandler-built, having been designed by Chandler engineers to the same careful standards of excellence that mark these other features of the car."

BANNER MONTH IS REGISTERED

Figures furnished by "Motor Registration News," statistical motor magazine, to officials of the Paige Company of Southern California, Paige and Jewett distributors, show the month of April was another big one for Jewett sales in the California territory. Registrations showed that Jewett had gained 21 per cent over the volume of business done during April, 1923.

Short Cuts to Motor Car Economy

THE IMPORTANCE OF STEERING CONTROL

I wonder how many car owners know where the tie rod bolt, tie rod ball socket, king pin, drag link, pitman arm and a half dozen other important parts required to make up the steering gear mechanism are located, and that these parts are secured in place by a nut and lock washer or a small cotter pin, which, if left out through carelessness or falling out through breakage in ordinary wear and tear, would result in serious accident.

No matter how careful the manufacturer's or service stations' standards of workmanship are there is always danger of a slip or oversight on the part of a mechanic when assembling or repairing front axles and steering gears, which justifies a most careful inspection of these parts on the part of the car owner when taking delivery of a new car or one that has been repaired or had the front wheels aligned. About the last thing that the high-speed boys do at the Indianapolis or any other speedway is to make a final inspection of steering mechanism and front axle, and the rules governing the International Sweepstake races at Indianapolis require a complete change of certain steering parts the day before the race and a close inspection. Serious accidents in the early-day races account for the present stringent racing rules, but it is no more important for these boys to be extremely cautious than it is for every individual that drives a car.

At the first sign of any unnatural feeling in the operation of your steering or sudden rattle developing when touring examine your steering connections closely. Further, always make it a practice to examine these parts closely after bumping curbstones hard or when bumping into the car ahead in traffic jams or after having front wheels aligned or repairs made following accidents. In addition to this, always examine steering parts before starting a long tour and at least twice a year in normal service.

GET ACQUAINTED

If you will turn the pages of your instruction book over to steering gear and front axle you are liable to find some points provided on your steering mechanism for lubrication that you have never seen before. Get acquainted with all points provided for lubrication and use the proper grade. Some gears require grease, others heavy oil.

There is no need for any car to be hard steering these days. Of course, if lubrication has been neglected for long periods, normal application of high-pressure grease or oil gun will not always do the trick. It may become necessary to run some kerosene through the affected parts until the dirt and corrosion work out, and in some cases it is often necessary to take the transverse steering-gear shaft out to free up the bearing. However, it is always best to try the kerosene remedy first on tight joints. Frequently a frozen bearing in the steering knuckle tie rod bolt or transverse shaft of gear itself can be freed up by soaking overnight in kerosene. A ball of waste tied about the affected part and soaked in kerosene overnight may save the trouble of removing the part from the car.

All steering connections exposed to road splash should be lubricated daily when touring over wet roads. If hard steering develops lubricate with front axle jacked up. In normal service lubricate steering connections at least once a week. Always after washing car.

Tight steering gear not only makes the car hard to control on the road, but causes excessive wear in the connections, worm and gears, since it requires greater pressure to turn the wheels. This results in excessive free play at the wheel.

When servicing steering gear for rattles do not permit tight adjusting of gear. If rattle cannot be eliminated by normal adjustment it may be necessary to renew a worn part. Manufacturers' service stations should have a remedy for rattles.

A low tire or tires of different size on front wheels will cause hard steering. Front wheels out of line will also cause hard steering along with excessive tire wear. If your tires are the least bit chafed have your tramming checked.

NEED INSPECTION

See that ball sockets on drag link and tie rod or tie rod bolts are securely locked in place and free from play. The Pitman arm from steering gear to drag link which connects steering gear to front axle should be checked for security. This operation should be done with wheels on floor while an assistant turns the steering wheel in both directions.

A broken or sagged spring on one side of car will affect steering. Overloading one side of car will do likewise. Replace defective springs and distribute your passenger load evenly. Remember that engineers are very careful when designing cars to distribute weight evenly. Owners should do likewise when adding extra equipment to cars.

See that all oil nipples and grease boots are in place on your steering mechanism. Frequently these become lost and unless you check with your instruction book you will not know just how many oilers there are and what kind of oil and how frequently parts should be lubricated.

See that steering-gear housing is fastened securely to frame and body to prevent rattles.

Don't wait for trouble. Get acquainted with your steering parts. Lubricate frequently and you will find that your car will steer just as easily after a year of service as the demonstrating car which sold you on the make you are now driving.

Seven years of thorough satisfaction

The Overland Freight Transfer Company of San Francisco operates over 125 pieces of automotive equipment, ranging in size from 10-ton Kleiber and G. M. C. tractors and 6-ton Doane trucks to Ford roadsters, all of which are probably subjected to as severe usage as any fleet of trucks in California.

This Company has ample facilities for testing out various lubricating oils and basing their choice on proven success in service. They write:

"After seven years of thorough satisfaction covering the lubrication of our equipment with your Zerolene oils and greases, we are more than pleased to again enter into a contract for our requirements."

In spite of the fact that many automotive engineers are of the decided opinion that the most suitable crude for the manufacture of an automobile lubricant is produced right here on the Pacific Coast, a certain proportion of the motoring public is still influenced by the superstition that there is something mysteriously "better" about eastern oils, just because they cost more.

Why pay tribute to a superstition? The Zerolene-lubricated car develops better gasoline mileage, accumulates less carbon, costs its owner less for upkeep, and lasts longer.

Insist on Zerolene, even if it does cost less.

QUESTIONS and ANSWERS

By James W. Marsh.

Question: I have a 1922 F. B. Chevrolet on which the generator does not work right. I paid out $14 to have it fixed and there is no improvement in it since I got it back from the repair shop. It charges all right up to about twenty-five miles an hour but at that speed it cuts out and the ammeter drops back to zero or a slight discharge. It makes a lot of noise after it cuts out. Will you please let me know, in the Sunday Times Question and Answers column, what is wrong and where I can take it to have it fixed?

JOE, L. A.

Answer: Your trouble is at the third brush. You can have the trouble overcome by putting in a new brush. It is quite important that Auto-lite parts be used. Take to the Auto-lite Company, 1236 South Hope.

Q.: Can you tell me what makes my Ford touring car, 1924, grunt? It has done so during the entire time I have had it. It is not loud or anything, but annoying. I have tried repeatedly to have the noise located but it has not been found. It is particularly noticeable on ripply roads.

J. H. P., West First.

A.: Without question the noise is caused by metal rubbing against metal. It is too tight to squeak, will squeak in time, but it should not be allowed to go on that long. I cannot say just which joint it is but probably is in the frame, where the joints are riveted together, between the body and frame, at the spring clips, engine support, or fenders, although the fenders are scarcely rigid enough to make a growl. Have some careful workman go over the car and inspect and tighten everything. It may be well to raise the body from the frame and see if the padding is all in place.

Q.: I have changed the tires on my 1920 Dodge from 32x3½ to 33x4. What difference will this make between the mileage registered on the speedometer and the actual mileage traveled?

W. C. T., Upland.

A.: The difference is that when the speedometer has registered 100 miles the car will have traveled 103 miles. A difference of 3 per cent. When the speedometer indicates a speed of thirty-three miles per hour the car will be making actually thirty-four.

Q.: I would like the address of the S. N. L. Technical Syndicate.

L. J. P., Herkimer street, Pasadena.

A.: S. N. L. Technical Syndicate, 822-26 Reaper Block, Chicago, Ill.

Q.: I have a 1918 Buick which burned a connecting rod. I had a new rod put in, the bearings taken up on the crank shaft, new wrist pins and rings put in. Will you explain what the trouble is as I had all the work well done and new parts installed?

J. A. V., City.

A.: This is just the kind of question I like; it gives me an opportunity to drive at one of the greatest mistakes of motorists and repair men. The work on your car may have been well done so far as it went but it went just far enough to make matters worse than they were before. Under no circumstances have main bearings taken up. A Buick has four main bearings. You ran the engine so poorly lubricated as to burn out a connecting rod. The main bearings were loose, it is impossible to wear them in line and when you had them taken up the shaft was distorted, this throws pistons out of line, and everything is moving under strain. The bearings must give or the crankshaft will crystallize and fracture. The cylinders will, or may, be scored by the pistons being out of alignment. The entire plant will suffer and the gas consumption will be high. A sample of what taking up bearings will do was brought to me a few days ago in the shape of a broken crankshaft. The fracture was clean and square and the steel badly crystallized; there was neither flaw nor defect at the point of separation. The cause of the knocks and noise is probably worn cylinders and pistons. The tight wristpins throw the skirts of the pistons forcibly against the walls of the cylinders making a heavy slap. Rings do not prevent slap. What you should have done was to have the cylinders reground, new pistons, rings and wristpins fitted, the mainbearings scraped and run in and the connecting rods and pistons squared up to the crankshaft. Probably the tappets are worn, rollers and guides, the rockerarms and shafts should have been inspected for wear, repaired if found worn, new valves with oversize stems should have been installed and the camshaft bearings looked after. If none of this work has been done in the past three years it is safe to say that all parts named are in need of attention. Your car is six years old but if it has had reasonable care it is well worth thoroughly repairing and after the job is done you will have an engine practically as good as new. Makeshift work does not pay and costs more in the long run than a thoroughly first-class job. Your saving on gasoloine and oil, freedom from trouble and expense and the satisfaction of running an engine that operates smoothly, quietly and powerfully are all important points to consider.

White Spot Car is Veteran of Long Standing

Thousands turn their eyes every day to watch the progress of a car covered with white spots on which are imprinted the names of many of the leading business organizations of Los Angeles. It carries the slogan of the Greater Los Angeles Association, "Keep the White Spot White."

When it was announced that the Paul G. Hoffman Company would place a car at the disposal of the association to help carry the message of prosperity the company besieged with requests for space to carry names of firms who are doing a good business here. When the first group of names was sent to the sign painter he found that he had very few spots left and so painted some little ones and used up the space on the running boards to accommodate other names.

As the names began to come in faster it was planned to produce a number of large tags to attach to the car and it may even be necessary to hang a trailer on behind to haul good sized billboards with column after column of firms who are prosperous.

When Harry H. Merrick, president of the association, called to thank the Hoffman Company for their co-operation he stated that he had found that the same spirit prevailed among other firms who desired to help. "It has spread outside of the city," said Merrick "and many other cities are co-operating with us to make the movement blanket all of Southern California."

Merrick was curious to learn why Hoffman did not take the opportunity to use one of the 1924 Studebaker models to carry the message and was told that the car in service is known as the Edison car in the Hoffman organization and is the first light-six ever sold in Los Angeles. It was used by the Edison Company for a period of 25,000 miles and then Hoffman coaxed the company to sell it back to him for use as a demonstrator. "It has done us a valuable service as a demonstrator," said Hoffman, "for it has convinced a large number of prospective buyers that a Studebaker light-six will stand up for long periods under severe service and still perform satisfactorily and deliver economical passenger transportation. The car is not for sale and will be in our service for a long time to come."

NEW INGREDIENT BATTLES CARBON

POURED INTO GASOLINE OILY COMPOUND PREVENTS THE CARBON FORMATION

All gasoline forms carbon—the deadly enemy of internal combustion engines. Carbon weakens compression, clogs valves, fouls spark plugs, wastes fuel and causes an unbelievable loss of power. Carbon shortens the life of a motor by hundreds of thousands of miles. Nobody knows how long a carbonless motor would run for the simple reason that nobody has ever had a carbonless motor.

Automobile engineers, chemists and scientists have worked on the carbon problem for years. It remained for Harrison H. Boyce, the inventor of the famous Boyce Moto-Meter, to solve it.

Mr. Boyce's answer to the carbon problem is "Boyce-ite," the new super-fuel ingredient, which, when poured into any gasoline in the correct proportions, makes it carbonless.

Boyce-ite-treated gasoline not only prevents carbon forming, it is said, but also eliminates the destructive carbon already in the motor. It is an oily compound, friendly and absolutely harmless to all metal surfaces. It contains no camphor, ether, acid or kerosene. It is nonexplosive, nonfreezing and nonevaporating.

FIND WAY TO RESTORE A DAMAGED "DECKING"

"The majority of motorists, when cleaning off the top of their sedans or coupes, are often dismayed to find that the deck is badly frayed, torn or cracked," says C. C. Eichenhofer, proprietor of the Atlas Auto Works, 1338 South Hope street, body workers and top re-coverers. "The prevailing belief of motorists is that this is almost impossible to remedy on a coupe or sedan. However, the Atlas Auto Works has found that by removing the moulding around the edge of the tops and using craftsman cloth cut to fit, these blemishes can be permanently covered up with this excellent top material. In this manner an entirely new decking is obtained at a small cost."

GRANDPA CARS IN REUNION

Hudson Model '20' of 1909 Vintage is Leading Exhibit of Oldtimer Collection

The "family reunion" being held at Harold L. Arnold's salesroom has been productive of much comment and served to draw old friends and customers together who had not been under the same roof for many years.

The novelty of Mr. Arnold's display lies chiefly in the fact that every old model Hudson shown could be sold today at its original price, if it was new and being built by modern methods. Few changes would have to be made, as the Hudson line has never been a radical one, the factory having held steadfastly to conservative body styles.

Great-grandpa Hudson, first of a long line of successful motor cars, occupies the place of honor. He is a 1909 model "20." Venerable as he is, there lies within his chassis a motor as staunch as the day it was "block tested" and turned over to the assembly department.

Fifteen years have rolled by since that car came from the factory. Over 200,000 miles lie behind its "clincher" tired wheels, and the story of the struggle and success of the motor-car industry unfolded its page, one by one, as it added more and more miles to its credit.

Other cars in the exhibit include the Hudson "33," a 1911 and 1912 product, the "37," built in 1913; the first of the famous "54" cars as well as the second of that model. In 1914 the Hudson Motor Car Company produced the first "streamline" car built, and placed this body upon the first six-cylinder car of forty horse power (termed a "light six") to be manufactured under that name.

The 1915 6-40s and 54s were similar to the 1914 types, but in 1916 radical changes were being made by other manufacturers in an effort to overcome the tremendous lead being gained by Hudson. In order to keep ahead of enterprising rivals, the Hudson factory turned loose a thoroughly trained and efficient corps of automotive engineers whose efforts culminated in the patenting of a new type crankshaft, which increased motor efficiency to such a remarkable degree that the 1916 motors were called "super-sixes."

This type of motor is still in use. From that date on, there have been no radical changes in Hudson motors or bodies. Refinements have been made from time to time, but each change was for the better, not for the sake of "sales arguments."

FATALITY LIST COMPILE

An idea of the toll of human life constantly being exacted by motor vehicles in all parts of the country can be had from the report of fatal accidents in Los Angeles county during April. These are compiled from transcriptions of Coroner's inquests by the public safety department of the Automobile Club of Southern California. The record is an impressive lesson for care in driving.

Of the total deaths from accidental causes in the county, forty-eight were traced to motor vehicles. There were 100 in all, an increase of thirty-two over the corresponding month last year.

Collisions between motor vehicles and pedestrians con hold first place among th ities. There were ninetee forty-eight deaths attrib this cause, an increase o deaths in this classifica the corresponding month l

Cutting in ahead of oth also is providing a prolific loss of life. There were talities under this heading children lost their lives wh ing in the street, and five were killed crossing the at cross walks. Incompet ling of cars caused eight and two more fatalities through driving to the l street car. Only one of accidents was attrib weather conditions.

TIRE USERS RELATE THEIR EXPERIENCES

C. Fred Thompson, McClaren tire distributor, has a filing cabinet filled with unsolicited letters from satisfied users among truck and car fleet owners and motorists. Pickwick Stages writes: "I feel that you are entitled to know the remarkable mileage of two McClaren tires we recently took off. These tires were put on the rear wheels of a Packard nineteen-passenger stage car and ran 12,000 miles and then moved to the front wheels where they delivered 25,340 miles, making a total of 37,340 miles. I ran one McClaren Autocrat Cord 44,000 miles and have had many do around 35,000."

SUNNY DAYS CALLI ATTENTION TO

The present unanimity o ny days and attendant Fahrenheit register, it is out, should be an ever-ins minder for motorists to weather eye on their tir ment. "Too much de should not be put in old tir ment at this time of the pecially," says Max Shiff ager of the Commercial T pany. "Many a casing has such a hog for mileage in endurance run since its that the car owner doesn't often, just how far goes it is."

GREATER SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA STRAIGHT AHEAD

Los Angeles Sunday Times

SUNDAY MORNING, JUNE 1, 1924.

ROTOGRAVURE SECTION

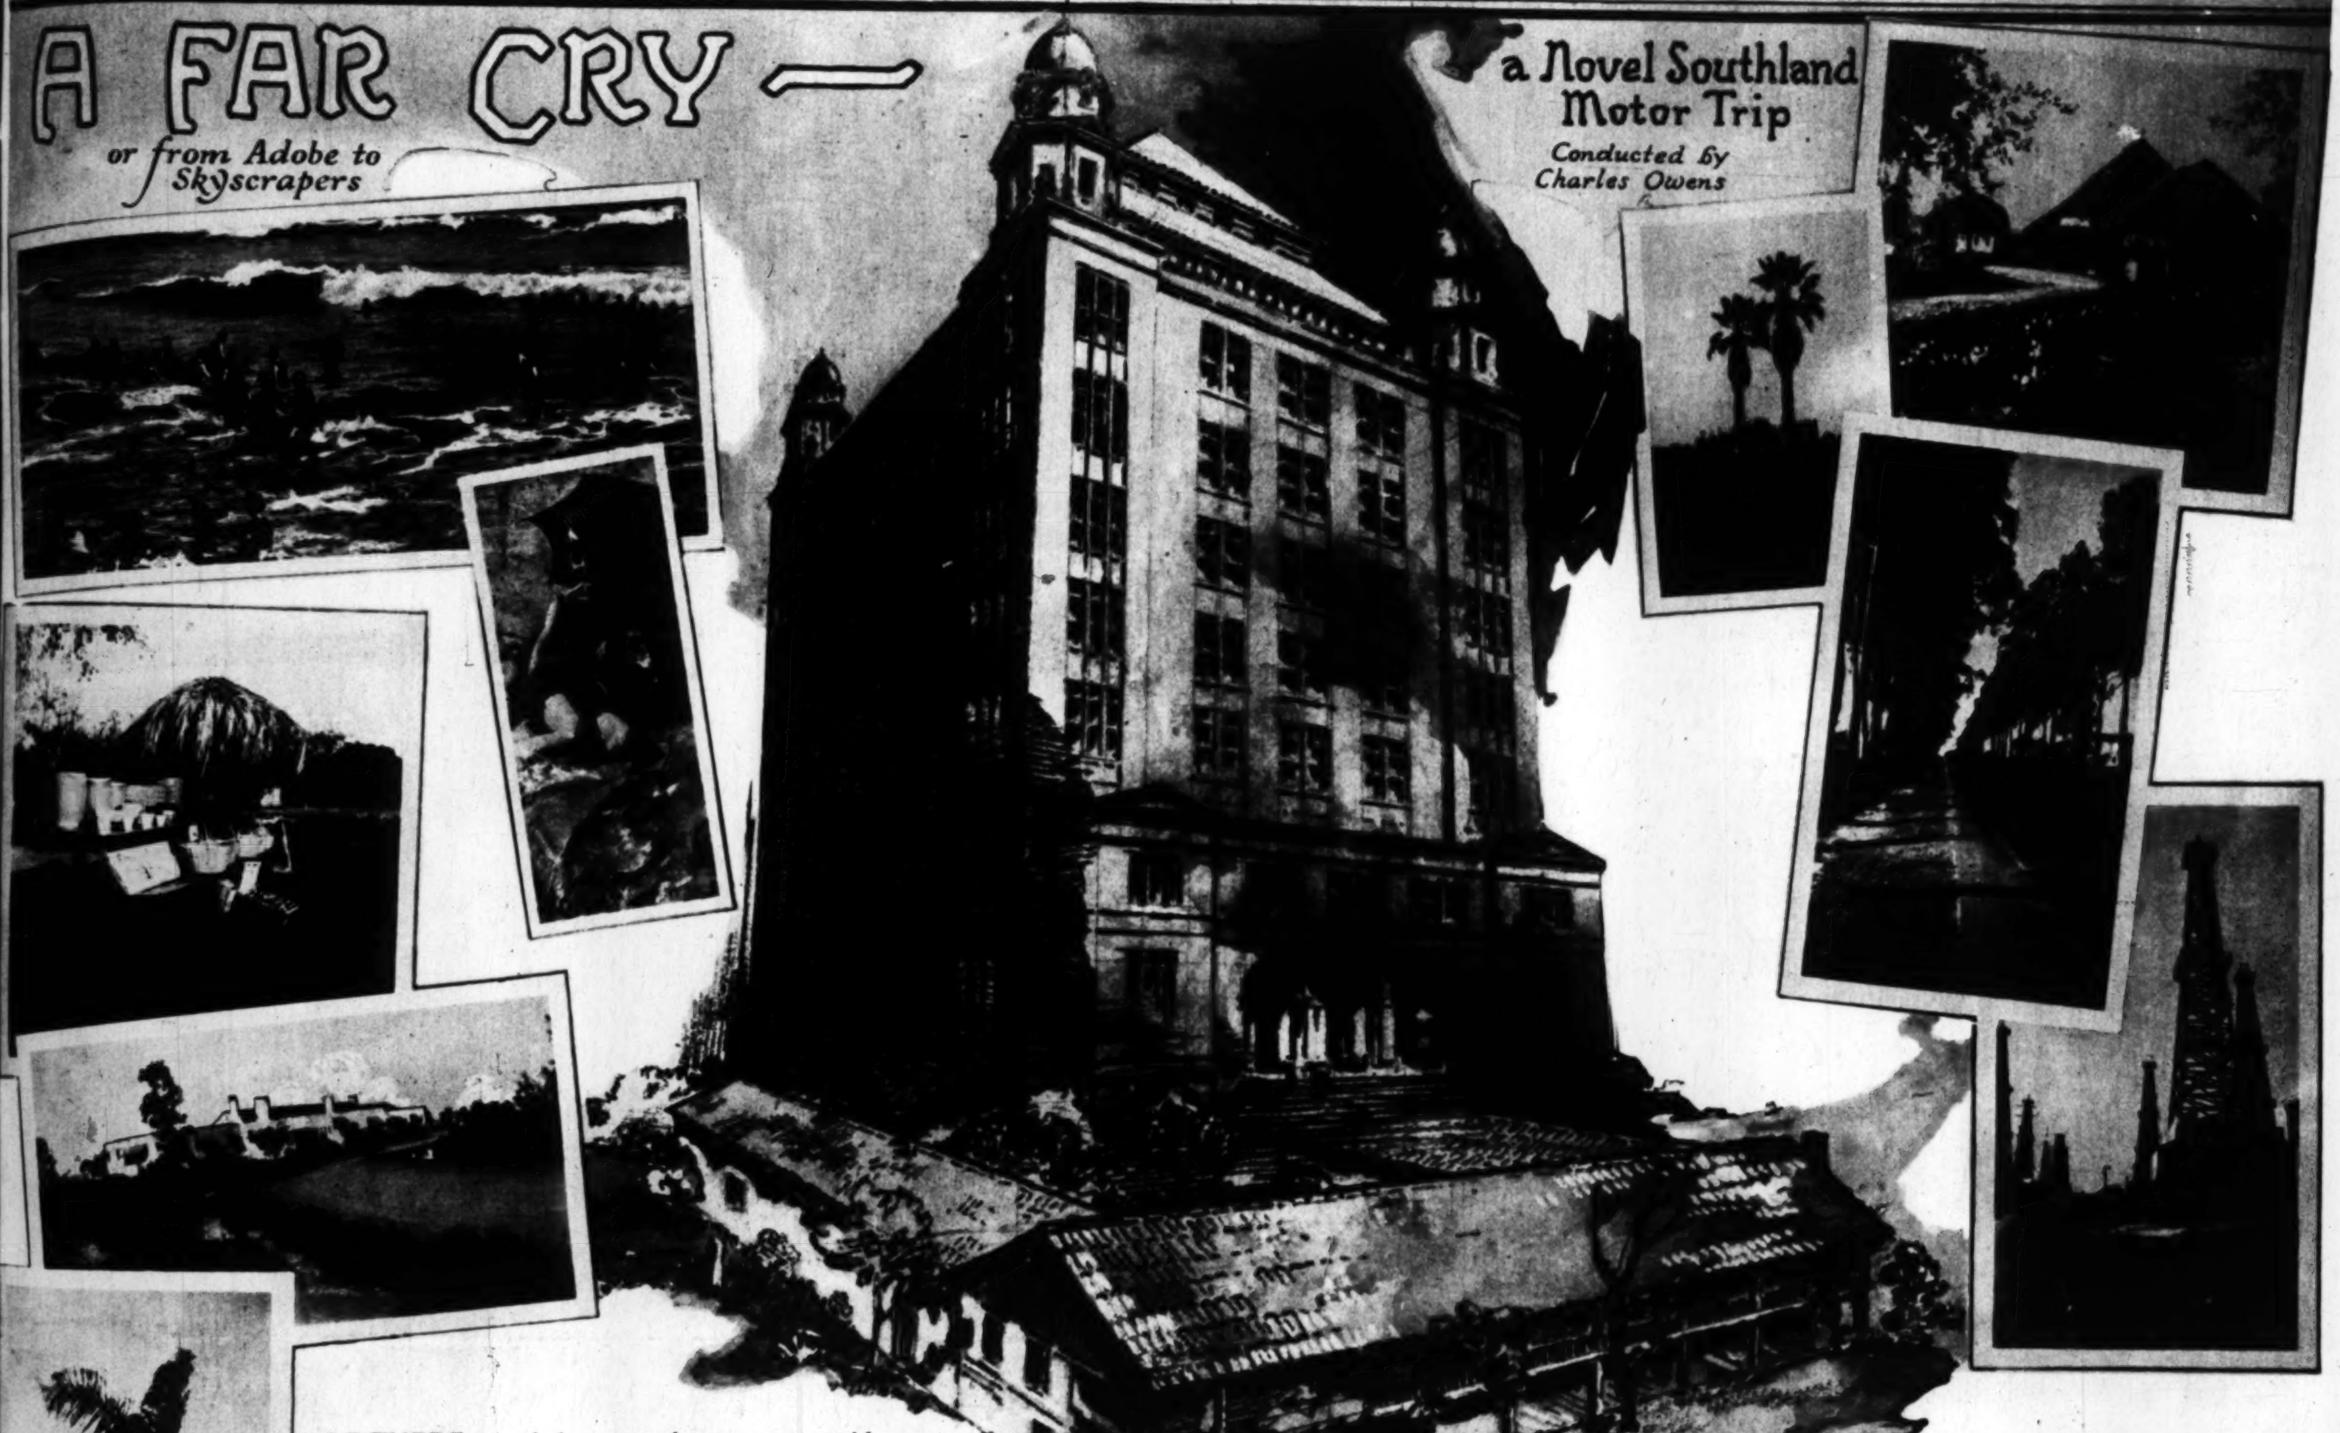
LAST WORD IN MODERN PRINTING.

A FAR CRY—

or from Adobe to Skyscrapers

a Novel Southland Motor Trip

Conducted by Charles Owens



IF THERE weren't facts to confute you, you would believe it a mirage, this city where the Bixby adobe looks across the arroyo at its skyscraper children of the hundred windows and where life pulses vigorously to the clock ticks of commerce.

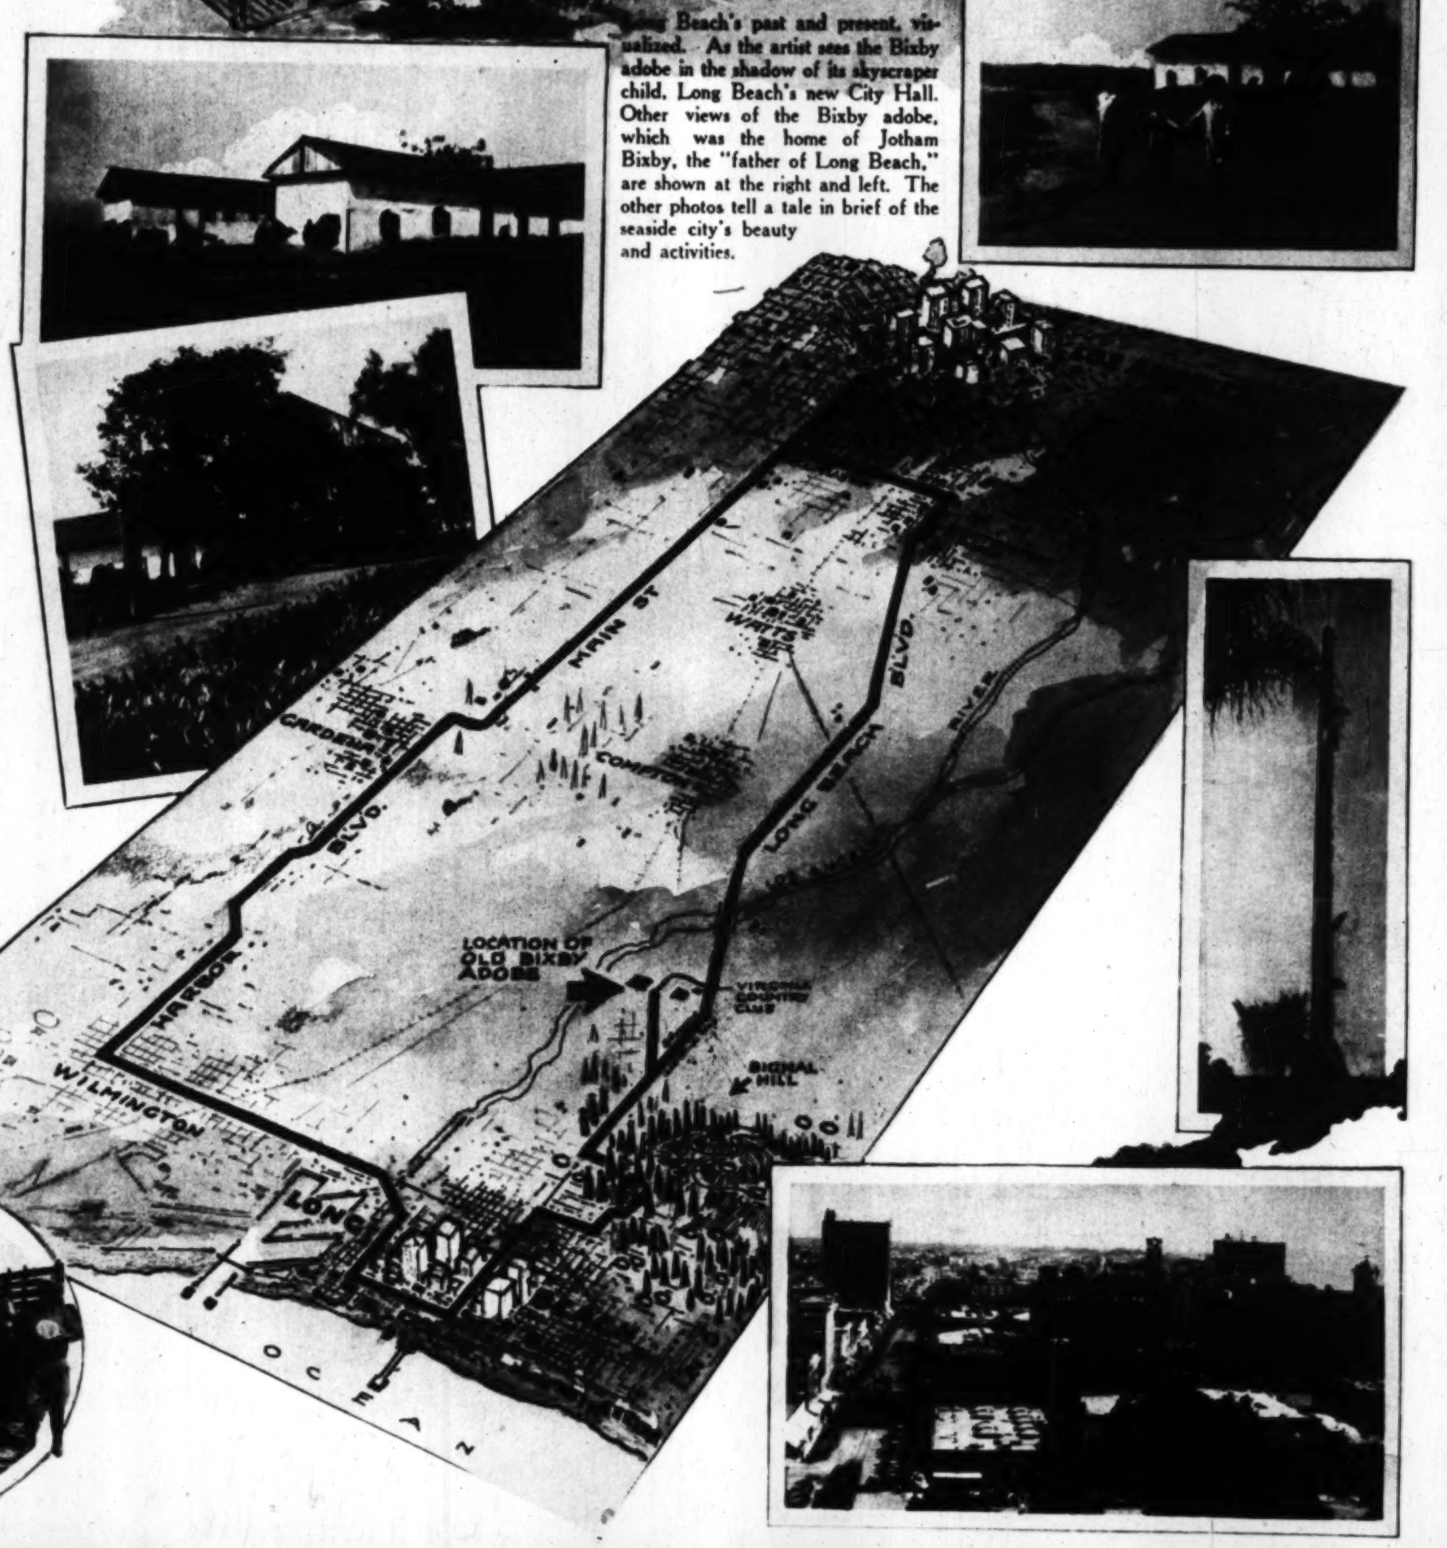
Those who remember Long Beach as a silver strand, with the Terminal Railway uptown, and Signal Hill as a bald knob crowned by cow sheds, will have to revive their views a bit in this year of grace, 1924, for Long Beach has seen visions and oil and energy have made them come true.

While Los Angeles has been content to make its City Hall of the "eighties" suffice for a city of 1,000,000 population, Long Beach has built a municipal building which would grace any city of the nation. It has done while others dreamed.

But it is as a city of dreams that The Times rotogravure pilot and artist sees Long Beach. Picture the Long Beach-to-be in 1840, with brown hills shimmering in the heat of the sun, Catalina as a mirage across a lonesome sea, and Los Angeles as a hamlet. This was the year that Don Juan Temple and his good wife, who was a daughter of Jose M. Cota, built the house which was later to be the home of Jotham Bixby, "the father of Long Beach."

Now reverse the picture, and from the vantage ground of the past, look upon Long Beach's City Hall as emblematical of a city which has seen visions and has made them come true. This is what The Times rotogravure pilot and artist has done.

Long Beach as a resort city still remains. But Long Beach has grown up. It has its first 100,000. Other thousands are coming. Long Beach looks to the future, but does not forget the past.



Long Beach's past and present, visualized. As the artist sees the Bixby adobe in the shadow of its skyscraper child, Long Beach's new City Hall. Other views of the Bixby adobe, which was the home of Jotham Bixby, the "father of Long Beach," are shown at the right and left. The other photos tell a tale in brief of the seaside city's beauty and activities.

Peace of Mind

Millions of women are finding it this new way

By ELLEN J. BUCKLAND, Graduate Nurse

HERE is a new way in personal hygiene. A way that assures peace of mind, charm and exquisiteness under circumstances impossible under old conditions.

Dances, bridge, the theatre—the demands of business and social duties — meet them now, confidently, unhandicapped. Wear, too, your filmiest frocks, your daintiest gowns!

Correcting a bad habit

80% of the lack of charm, the loss of the immaculacy expected of a woman, according to hygienic authorities, is due to the common use of makeshift "sanitary pads."

60% of many ills common to women, according to numerous medical authorities, are due to the same cause. Using these unsanitary ways is a bad habit.

Millions have turned to a new way. Foremost doctors advise it. Eight in every ten women in the better walks of life have adopted it.

Charm, immaculacy, exquisiteness, under all circumstances, is one reason. Greater respect of self, better health is another.

This new way is called KOTEX—a discovery of a nurse in war time France. It supplants the old time sanitary pad

Made of Cellucotton—the war's super-absorbent — it absorbs 16 times its own weight in moisture.

Hygienically prepared, it does not invite the germs of disease to breed and multiply. Hence it is important in modern health precaution.

No trouble disposing of

It is as easily disposed of as a piece of tissue—simply discard it. No embarrassment, no difficulty.

Women who seek daintiness, peace of mind, exquisiteness and safety under all circumstances, use it. Once you do, no other method will ever satisfy. And millions will tell you this.

All drug and department stores have KOTEX in plain packages. Get it without embarrassment simply by saying "Kotex." 12 snowy white, immaculate folds in the medium package.

I would like to send you a new booklet for women on this subject, written by a doctor. Just write for it. And if you have never tried KOTEX, I will be glad to send you a sample, free.

The wonders of Lux for shampoo

"All the shine has come back"
"My hair is very thick - Lux leaves it clean and fluffy"
"It is no longer a problem to get the suds out"

WHEN a woman takes time during a busy day to hunt up our address on a package of Lux just to tell us what wonderful results she has had with Lux—well, it's real enthusiasm that prompts her. We know she means what she says.

Almost everyone who writes about shampoo says in one way or another, "It occurred to me that since Lux is so good for silks it would be good for hair, too."

But read these letters from women who "just couldn't help writing" about the wonders of Lux for shampoo. They are more eloquent than anything we could say.

LEVER BROS. CO., CAMBRIDGE, MASS.

"SIMPLE TO USE"

"I wish to tell you something I have discovered about Lux. It is a delightful shampoo. My hair is dark, rather fine and difficult to keep looking its best. I find that Lux is just the thing. It is so simple to use and followed by a lemon rinse the hair looks and feels so clean. Even a working girl can afford this luxurious shampoo."

E. G., Sweetwater, Tenn.

"BRINGS OUT THE GOLD TINTS"

"I have been very much pleased over Lux in cleaning my silks and fine muslins but when I discovered it was a wonderful shampoo I was delighted. It leaves the hair soft and fluffy, brings out the gold tints in the hair and gives it a rich lustre. It doesn't make the hair brittle as most shampoos do. The scalp is clean and the hair smells sweet and is free from any sticky substance. One couldn't ask for a better shampoo for you know it makes a wonderful lather."

G. M., Hudson, Mich.

"IDEAL FOR THICK, LIGHT HAIR"

"I am at the close of a busy day, taking time to hunt up your address on an almost empty box of Lux, so I may write you and ask if you know what an ideal shampoo you have made. Everyone knows how beautifully Lux cleans the most delicate fabrics but very few people know how beautifully clean and fluffy it makes the hair. I, for instance, had used it for a long time for cleaning waists, etc., and then one day when I was in a great hurry I washed my hair with it. I was delighted. I have always been careful about what I used on my hair, but Lux is ideal for very thick, light hair—so quick to use and leaving it so clean and fluffy. After that I used it on my little girl's brown curls with the same delightful result. Please tell others about Lux for shampoo."

R. M. S., Los Angeles, Cal.

"HAIR NEVER LOOKED BETTER"

"For about a year I have used Lux for shampoo with wonderful success. I have curly, light auburn hair and I am very proud of it. It used to be hard to get all the soap out of my hair when I washed it, so one day I tried Lux for I had had such good results with it on fine silks and real laces. I have never used anything else since that lucky day and my hair never looked better. It only takes half the time to clean and dry and always looks beautiful. I use it every two weeks and have no dandruff or trouble of any kind and my hair is thick and bright and curly. I cannot say too much good of Lux."

D. L. T., Annapolis, Md.

"SO NICE AND GLOSSY"

"I think perhaps I have a new use for Lux, so will tell you about it. I find it the very best shampoo for the hair I have ever used. I tried all the good shampoos in the market but my hair continued to come out. I now wash it every two weeks with Lux and it is so nice and black and glossy and has stopped falling. My husband was afraid at first to let me use it but I used it on all my fine silks and woolens with such excellent results that I felt sure it could not harm my hair. It is so convenient, easy to use and the hair dries quickly and evenly after using it. I'm sure if people would try it, they would find it the best as well as the cheapest shampoo on the market."

R. L. S., Sellersville, Pa.

"LOOKS TWICE AS HEAVY"

"Lux makes the best shampoo I ever used, and I've tried all the higher priced ones. Truly they aren't to be compared with Lux. The foamy, creamy lather is a joy and the result is a mass of the softest, fluffiest, cleanest smelling hair. Mine is fifty-one years old—I was born with a lot of it—getting thin and not so bright in color. Since I've been using Lux as a shampoo all the youthful shine has come back and it looks twice as heavy. You know how grateful a woman my age would be for that."

H. G., Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Dark Era

of teeth cleaning—changed a few years ago

Up to 1915 the war on film seemed a losing fight.

Despite all care, most people's teeth were coated more or less. Tooth troubles were almost universal. Pyorrhea became alarmingly common.

Able authorities have sought for film combatants. Now things have changed. You see glistening teeth in every circle now. Millions of homes of some 50 nations have adopted a new method of teeth cleaning.

The ruinous film

Most tooth troubles are due to film—that viscous coat you feel. It clings to teeth, gets between the teeth and stays.

Soon the film discolors, forming dingy coats, and teeth lose their luster.

Film also holds food substance which ferments and forms acid. It holds the acid in contact with the teeth to cause decay. Germs breed by millions in it. They, with tartar, are the chief cause of pyorrhea.

No ordinary tooth paste effectively fights film. So dental science sought new methods and found two. One disintegrates the film at all stages of formation. One removes it without harmful scouring.

Many careful tests have proved these methods effective. A new-type tooth paste has been created to apply the methods daily. The name is Pepsodent.

A new era has dawned

Research has revealed other essentials, and Pepsodent meets them.

It multiplies the alkalinity of the saliva, which is there to neutralize mouth acids. It multiplies the starch digestant in saliva, which is there to digest starch deposits on teeth.

These combined effects have brought a new dental era. Its use quickly has spread the world over, largely through dental advice.

Now millions of people in every clime enjoy the Pepsodent effects. Their teeth are whiter, cleaner, safer. No one who once learns what Pepsodent means will ever go without it.

Protect the Enamel

Pepsodent disintegrates the film, then removes it with an agent far softer than enamel. Never use a film combatant which contains harsh grit.

Fairfax

for the smartly appointed table

FASHIONABLE women of Colonial days had much of their choicest silver specially made by our own best silversmiths. But they ordered it done "in the newest mode from England." This was the beginning of what we know as Colonial style.

Today the most popular Colonial pattern—the most popular silverware ever designed—is Gorham's Fairfax.

With its sharply contrasted planes and beautiful octagonal reflecting surfaces, Fairfax is the quintessence of that charming Colonial simplicity which lasts. Passing styles of the moment cannot affect its value.

Fairfax has an immediate appeal to the women who take pride in a well dressed table—for a simple luncheon or a formal dinner party.

Your jeweler will show you this and other exquisite Gorham patterns—coffee services, candlesticks, complete dinner sets—wrought by Gorham, for 90 years America's leading silversmiths. Gorham quality costs no more than ordinary ware.

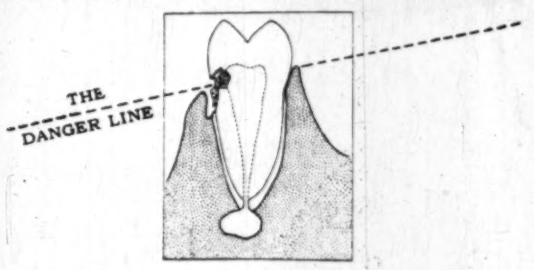
THE DANGER LINE

Stop Decay at

THE DANGER LINE



ACIDS in your mouth are constantly attacking your teeth. These acids eat tiny, microscopic holes in the enamel. Holes so small that they cannot be seen, yet germs can get in them and continue the decay.

Such decay spreads and finally develops a large, painful cavity—especially at The Danger Line (the V-shaped crevice where teeth meet gums).

As shown in the above illustration, decay extends under the gums, causing irritation and infection. Abscesses form at the roots of the teeth. Receding, bleeding gums and pyorrhea come from such conditions.

You can prevent Acid Decay by the regular use of Squibb's Dental Cream, made with Squibb's Milk of Magnesia. When you brush your teeth with it, tiny particles of magnesia are deposited in the microscopic holes in the enamel. These particles of magnesia remain in the mouth for hours, neutralizing acids as they form.

Milk of magnesia is the only product known to dental science which will accomplish this safely.

Begin to use Squibb's Dental Cream now for thorough, lasting protection instead of the "temporary cleaning" given by ordinary dentifrices. You will prefer its delightful flavor—the bright, clean polish it gives your teeth, and the soothing way in which it relieves sensitiveness caused by acidity.

The Wonderful Stories of OZ

By L. Frank Baum

How Uncle Henry Got Into Trouble

DOROTHY GALE lived on a farm in Kansas, with her Aunt Em and her Uncle Henry. It was not a big farm, nor a very good one, because sometimes the rain did not come when the crops needed it, and then everything withered and dried up. Once a cyclone had carried away Uncle Henry's house, so that he was obliged to build another; and as he was a poor man he had to mortgage his farm to get the money to pay for the new house. Then his health became bad and he was too feeble to work. The doctor ordered him to take a sea voyage and he went to Australia and took Dorothy with him. That cost a lot of money, too.

Uncle Henry grew poorer every year, and the crops raised on the farm only bought food for the family. Therefore the mortgage could not be paid. At last the banker who had loaned him the money said that if he did not pay on a certain day, his farm would be taken away from him.

This worried Uncle Henry a good deal, for without the farm he would have no way to earn a living. He was a good man, and worked in the fields as hard as he could; and Aunt Em did all the housework, with Dorothy's help. Yet they did not seem to get along.

This little girl, Dorothy, was like dozens of little girls you know. She was loving and usually sweet-tempered, and had a round rosy face and earnest eyes. Life was a serious thing to Dorothy, and a wonderful thing, too, for she had encountered more strange adventures in her short life than many other girls of her age.

Aunt Em once said she thought the fairies must have marked Dorothy at her birth, because she had wandered into strange places and had always been protected by some unseen power. As for Uncle Henry, he thought his little niece merely a dreamer, as her dead mother had been, for he could not quite believe all the curious stories Dorothy told them of the Land of Oz, which she had several times visited. He did not think that she tried to deceive her uncle and aunt, but he imagined that she had dreamed all of those astonishing adventures, and that the dreams had been so real to her that she had come to believe them true.

Whatever the explanation might be, it was certain that Dorothy had been absent from her Kansas home for sever long periods, always disappearing unexpectedly, yet always coming back safe and sound, with amazing tales of where she had been and the unusual people she had met. Her uncle and aunt listened to her stories eagerly and in spite of their doubts began to feel that the little girl had gained a lot of experience and wisdom that were unaccountable in this age, when fairies are supposed no longer to exist.

Most of Dorothy's stories were about the Land of Oz, with its beautiful Emerald City and a lovely girl Ruler named Ozma, who was the most faithful friend of the little Kansas girl. When Dorothy told about the riches of this fairy country Uncle Henry would sigh, for he knew that a single one of the great emeralds that were so common there would pay all his debts and leave his farm free. But Dorothy never brought any jewels home with her, so their poverty became greater every year.

When the banker told Uncle Henry that he must pay the money in thirty days or leave the farm, the poor man was in despair, as he knew he could not possibly get the money. So he told his wife, Aunt Em, of his trouble, and she first cried a little and then said they must be brave and do the best they could, and go away somewhere and try to earn an honest living. But they were getting old and feeble and she feared that they could not take care of Dorothy as well as they had formerly done. Probably the little girl would also be obliged to go to work.

They did not tell their niece the sad news for several days, not wishing to make her unhappy; but one morning the little girl found Aunt Em softly crying while Uncle Henry tried to comfort her. Then Dorothy asked them to tell her what was the matter.

"We must give up the farm, my dear," replied her uncle sadly, "and wander away into the world to work for our living."

The girl listened quite seriously, for she had not known before how desperately poor they were.

"We don't mind for ourselves," said her aunt, stroking the little girl's head tenderly; "but we love you as if you were our own child, and we are heartbroken to think that you must also endure poverty, and work for a living before you have grown big and strong."

"What could I do to earn money?" asked Dorothy.

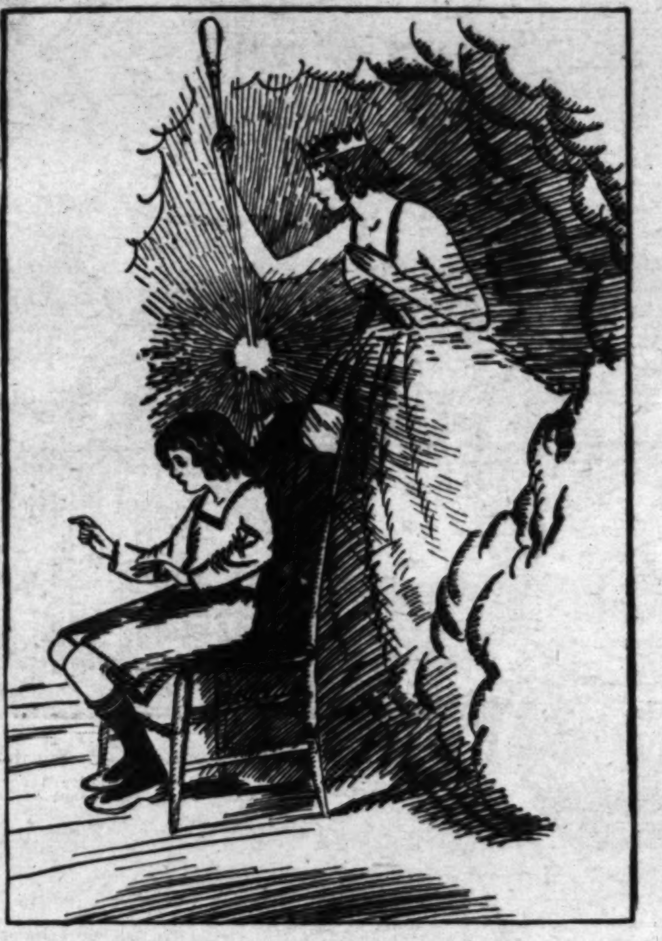
"You might do housework for some one, dear, you are so handy; or perhaps you could be a nursemaid to little children. I'm sure I don't know exactly what you can do to earn money, but if your uncle and I are able to support you we will do it willingly, and send you to school. We fear, though, that we shall have much trouble in earning a living for ourselves. No one wants to employ old people who are broken down in health, as we are."

Dorothy smiled.

"Wouldn't it be funny," she said, "for me to do housework in Kansas, when I'm a Princess in the Land of Oz?"

"A Princess!" they both exclaimed, astonished.

"Yes; Ozma made me a Princess some time ago, and she has often begged me to come and live always in the Emerald City," said the child.



Then She Made the Secret Signal That Had Been Agreed Upon

Her uncle and aunt looked at each other in amazement. Then the man said:

"Do you suppose you could manage of return to your fairyland, my dear?"

"Oh, yes," replied Dorothy; "I could do that easily."

"How?" asked Aunt Em.

"Ozma sees me every day at 4 o'clock, in her Magic Picture. She can see me wherever I am, no matter what I am doing. And at that time, if I make a certain secret sign, she will send for me by means of the Magic Belt, which I once captured from the Nome King. Then, in the wink of an eye, I shall be with Ozma in her palace."

The elder people remained silent for some time after Dorothy had spoken. Finally Aunt Em said, with another sigh of regret:

"If that is the case, Dorothy, perhaps you'd better go and live in the Emerald City. It will break our hearts to lose you from our lives, but you will be so much better off with your fairy friends that it seems wisest and best for you to go."

"I'm not so sure about that," remarked Uncle Henry, shaking his gray head doubtfully. "These things all seem real to Dorothy, I know; but I'm afraid our little girl won't find her fairyland just what she has dreamed it to be. It would make me very unhappy to think that she was wandering among strangers who might be unkind to her."

Dorothy laughed merrily at this speech, and then she became very sober again, for she could see how all this trouble was worrying her aunt and uncle, and knew that unless she found a way to help them their future lives would be quite miserable and unhappy. She knew that she could help them. She had thought of a way already. Yet she did not tell them at once what it was, because she must ask Ozma's consent before she would be able to carry out her plans.

So she only said:

"If you will promise not to worry a bit about me, I'll go to the Land of Oz this very afternoon. And I'll make a promise, too; that you shall both see me again before the day comes when you must leave this farm."

"The day isn't far away, now," her uncle sadly replied. "I did not tell you of our trouble until I was obliged to, dear Dorothy, so the evil time is near at hand. But if you are quite sure your fairy friends will give you a home, it will be best for you to go to them, as your aunt says."

That was why Dorothy went to her little room in the attic that afternoon, taking with her a small dog named Toto. The dog had curly black hair and big brown eyes and loved Dorothy very dearly.

The child had kissed her uncle and aunt affectionately before she went upstairs, and now she looked around her little room rather wistfully, gazing at the simple trinkets and worn calico and gingham dresses, as if they were old friends. She was tempted at first to make a bundle of them, yet she knew very well that they would be of no use to her in her future life.

She sat down upon a broken-backed chair—the only one the room contained—and holding Toto in her arms waited patiently until the clock struck four.

Then she made the secret signal that had been agreed upon between her and Ozma.

Uncle Henry and Aunt Em waited downstairs. They were uneasy and a good deal excited, for this is a practical humdrum world, and it seemed to them quite impossible that their little niece could vanish from her home and travel instantly to fairyland.

So they watched the stairs, which seemed to be the only way that Dorothy could get out of the farmhouse, and they watched them a long time. They heard the clock strike four, but there was no sound from above.

Half-past four came, and now they were too impatient to wait any longer. Softly they crept up the stairs to the door of the little girl's room.

"Dorothy! Dorothy!" they called.

There was no answer.

They opened the door and looked in.

The room was empty.

A MUSCLE BUILDER

How many of you fellows like strong-arm stunts? Good! Then you'll all be interested in the one I'm going to tell you about now. They say many years ago the Indian braves used to do this same thing just to keep limbered up. I also heard that in Merry Old England Robin Hood's men practiced this exercise.

Get a smooth, stout stick about three or four feet long (a strong broom handle will do nicely.) Then scratch a straight line on the ground as shown in this picture. Your opponent stands across the line from you and both of you take a strong grip on the stick.

The object of this stunt is to see which boy can twist the stick out of the other's hands without being pulled across the line.

A BROOM HANDLE WILL DO FINE.

FOUGHT OFF TEMPTATION

"No," said the old man sternly. "I will not do it. Never have I sold anything by false representation, and I will not begin now." For a moment he was silent, and the clerk who stood before him could see that the better nature of his employer was fighting strongly for the right. "No," said the old man again, "I will not do it. It is an inferior grade of shoe, and I will never pass it off as anything better. Mark it 'A Shoe Fit for a Queen,' and put it in the window. A queen does not have to do much walking."—[Atlanta Journal.

"I'm a funny cow, I am," said Katherine, waving her . "Why, my mother was the who danced 109 hours without stopping to eat grass!"

And then - because the floor was so shiny, poor Katherine slipped.

"Oh, look at the Cow-Slip!" said one little who was quite rude.

This made Dot the Dumb laugh so hard and so long and so loudly that she shook the floor and the poor, poor fell down.

"I'm a disgraced cow! I'm a disgraced cow!" said Katherine. And the was led by the little from the shiny, slippery floor.

That night beside the of the little under the lilac bush, slept the - and the ground was wet with tears.

A COWBOY STUNT

Fellow rope spinners, all of you who mastered our other stunt are ready now for this new one.

Take your lasso in your right hand as usual, only this time make a large circle and stand in the center (see diagram.) Hold the rope as shown, and with raised right arm start circular rope spinning motion. You may have to try this several times, but once you get the true swing of it you will find the lasso humming swiftly around you. Be careful not to let it touch you, as that will stop it.

The slower you spin the lasso the lower the circle will be; the f[illegible]er you whirl it the higher it will go. Sometimes it will even climb higher than your head if spun rapidly enough.

Do not hold the rope too tightly. Let it twist in your hand. This will help keep it from getting twisted.

HINDU FLOWER MIRACLE

The Hindus are noted for the many marvelous tricks they perform. Here is one that is very spectacular — and very easy to work.

Take any jar which you can't see through. Now get a good-sized lump of cork and stick a straight piece of stiff wire in it. Put the two cross wires (a) in place so that the affair will not fall over against the side of the jar and attach the flower in place. Put this contraption in the jar and fill with water slowly.

The water makes the cork float and the flower rises or "grows" out of the jar CAP'N ZYB

HOW TO MAKE VACATION MONEY

Practical Ideas for Boys and Girls

When a boy can slap his pocket at the end of the summer and hear the dollars clink—dollars that he's earned himself—it gives him a good feeling of having spent his vacation at something more profitable than idle fun.

Nearly every boy and girl feels a desire to earn money, but how to earn it is the question. There are plenty of things a boy or girl is capable of doing that will make the dimes and dollars come rolling in, if he only knows what they are. Every Saturday for the next few weeks, the boys and girls who read this page will be told some ways to make money. Of course, every suggestion will not be suited to every person, but if you read our money-making ideas for a while, you'll no doubt find among them a workable plan for you.

Here are some ideas for making money before school lets out. Begin your work now and you'll have your business under way before the other fellows ever start.

Make a house-to-house call for a local hardware firm to secure orders for screening doors and windows. You should be able to get a commission on all the screens you sell. Or you might get orders to let you repair and paint old screens. Putting up screens is a nuisance for many house owners. You can make some money getting people's screens in place.

An idea for both boys and girls is the porch furniture one. People at this time of year are having their porch sets renovated for summer weather. Painting is not a hard task, although many people are glad to get someone to do it for them. Find some neighbors who would like to turn over to you the job of getting their furniture in shape. The popular magazines contain many illustrations of color schemes for porches. Select your colors carefully and paint your pieces. If the order gives you the privilege of making cretonne covers and porch pillows, be sure that your selection of material harmonizes with the color of the furniture.

TIMES JUNIOR CLUB IS A NATION WITHIN A NATION

Activities Attract World-Wide Interest; Organization Praised as Potent Factor for Betterment

Picture a nation within a nation, with a population of over 100,000, threescore or more varied activities, its own government founded on the age-old motto, "Truth, Love, Courage," and one has some idea of the ideals and achievements of The Times Junior Club, which is now the largest organization of its kind in the world, with members in every State of the Union and half the countries of the globe.

It is a junior republic which has become a potent factor for betterment in the lives of untold thousands, and which has developed and discovered child artists, child actors and musicians, and has brought a new joy in life to orphans and children in the hospitals. In fact, it has become an institution of Southern California, and has attracted nation-wide attention.

The Times Junior Club, conducted by Aunt Dolly, is in effect a junior republic of world extent. Designed to teach children self-reliance and self-development, it is governed by its own officers, who win their places through work in the club activities. The club motto, "Truth, Love, Courage," is constantly before the hundreds of little workers in the various activities of the organization; the lesson of happiness is ever present, and no jealousies are allowed. The club and its work is one of the worst enemies of the juvenile court; it has kept hundreds of cases out of that institution—by guiding children to the right before they strode too far on the wrong path.

Primarily designed to bring happiness to the children of Los Angeles, the club gives big parties, theatrical performances, and other entertainments for the membership, as the Christmas fete, where more than 25,000 children were entertained; the recent May Day festival held for the benefit of the deserving by vote of the club members and where a traveling vaudeville show went from orphanage to orphanage and hospi-

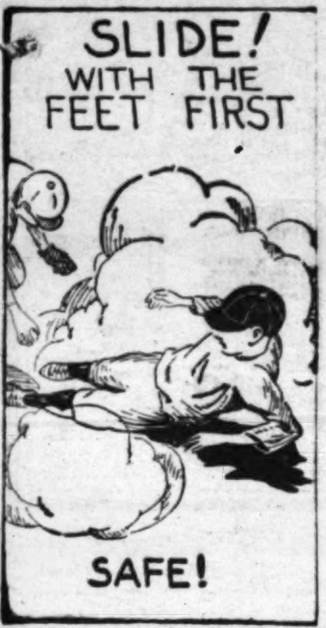
HOW TO SLIDE

A Lesson in Baseball

When should a player slide? The simplest answer is to say "Whenever he needs to," but that isn't entirely satisfactory. Slide, I say, whenever you have a chance of getting safe which you would not have if you made the play standing up. The hard part still lies with you because you must decide, and instantly, when you have a better chance sliding than you have standing.



SLIDE!
FEET FIRST
SAFE!

In the case of a close play at any of the bases except first, you should usually slide. When I say slide I mean slide and not jump, dive, leap or fall. You can practice getting the long, clean slide with its hook in a good sand pile—sand piles don't rough you up so much. Do not practice sliding head first. It is a very dangerous trick and has no advantage over the foot-first slide except when used by a very remarkable player, like Frankie Frisch of the New York Giants.

SLIDE CLEANLY

When you go into a base on your slide, try to go in cleanly and escape the player who is trying to tag you "out" with the ball. Never use your slide to frighten the other player by trying to spike him. Such playing and sliding have no place in baseball.

Another dodge which will help your team win games is to make all the players on the team get into the habit of running out every hit, every time they hear the crack of the bat, without waiting to see where the hit has gone.

Even the best fielders muff the ball and if you will run out every hit every time you will find that you will get on base many times when it looks as though there was no chance for it.

The Poke With Straw Braid Crown

You can almost make the straw braid poke by following the picture without further directions. The crown, you see, is made by sewing rows of braid together over an old crown of the proper shape, then taking out the crown and leaving a flexible braid covering. This is exactly the process milliners use when they make the soft crown hats you find in the shops.

This hat is likely to cost a bit more than other hats you have learned to make in these lessons, for the braid is usually about ten cents a yard and you will need ten yards. Perhaps you can get yours more cheaply. Make your buckram frame as in the diagram, following it for measurements. The brim is longer on the sides, so you want to cut it off a little in front and still more in back. Cover the brim with cloth and bind the edge with braid.

Sew your braid together, beginning at the bottom and whipping on successive rows till the top brings it to an end. Be sure not to sew to the crown, as it is to come out. A nice way to finish the hat is to put yarn flowers or pom-pons on each side of the crown. You may make them yourself.

HUNT WAS EASY

Stranger Selected as Victim Gets Away With Costly Coat

The young men of this city worked the old "snipe hunting" game on a stranger who landed here and did not know a thing about the ancient joke stunt. It was great sport for the boys, but it backfired to the tune of $100, something they were not looking for. The stranger seemed to be greatly enthused about the game, and said it was just the kind of a job he was looking for.

He took the sack and started out, but it was a chilly night and he declared he ought to be provided with an overcoat. The crowd gleefully gave him a topcoat worth one hundred iron boys. They are still looking for the stranger, the overcoat, the snipe and the sack.—[Metz (Mo.) Dispatch in New York World.

EDDIE COLLINS TELLS HOW HE MAKES A DOUBLE PLAY

(Written by Eddie Collins Exclusively for This Page)

His own boys, Eddie, Jr., and Paul, and the boys they play with, ask Eddie Collins all sorts of questions about baseball. Eddie has collected some of these questions and he tells the boys who read this paper just how he answers them.

How Do You Make a Double Play at Second Base?

The success or failure of a double play depends mostly upon the execution of the play by the middle man at second base. Failure on this individual's part to handle the ball fast means a loss of the play at first base. In order to handle the ball fast, he must be in the proper position to handle it and in order to be in this position it is most essential that he reach the bag in time to receive the throw from the fielder to whom the ball was hit. He should avoid making this play while on the run. I realize balls are frequently hit so sharply that they are in a fielder's hands almost before one has had a chance to move. Bearing this in mind, I would suggest that the second baseman play a few steps nearer the bag when first base is occupied, than he would ordinarily if no one was on base. Always have the thought in mind "Cover the bag." Never leave the base unprotected. If play calls you elsewhere, have a perfect understanding with the shortstop that he is as much responsible for the guardianship of the middle bag as you are. Be in a position to receive the throw directly over the base if possible, then you can touch the bag with either foot, depending upon which side you step to receive the throw, and no time will be lost in getting the ball away. Practice getting the ball away quickly with a snap throw. Don't wind up to make your throw swifter. The play will be successful more times with quick handling than it will be with hard throwing.

Eddie Collins is here ready to receive a ball to make a double play such as he tells you about today.

How Do You Get Out of a Slump?

I think the answer to this can be summed up in one word! Perseverance. Slumps in baseball—particularly noticeable in batting—are bound to overtake every player some time or other. Their coming is unexplainable—their presence most distressing, and often dangerous, as the contagion is apt to spread to other members of the team. The only cure I have found is just keep plugging along and you are sure to come out of it if you keep trying. It frequently happens that a player will go to bat fifteen or twenty times, which means normally, three or four games without getting anything like a base hit. Under such circumstances, when it has happened to me, I try to do something different. I try to bunt or make a pitcher work down to the very limit to get a base on balls. Anything to reach base, to restore my batting confidence, which necessarily is at a low ebb during a slump. Confidence in yourself while at bat—say to yourself "I will reach that bag" and mean it as well, and you are a hitter half made. Your ability will take care of the other half, never fear.

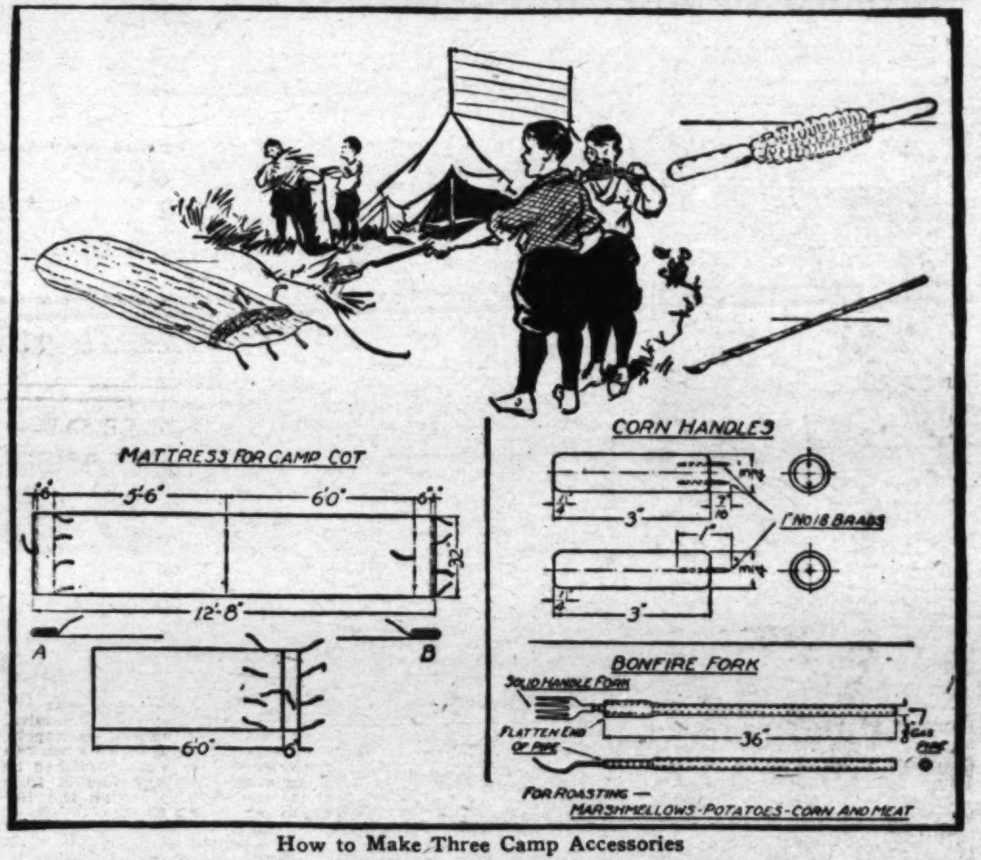
TOOLCRAFT; ALL SORTS OF THINGS FOR BOYS AND MEN TO MAKE; BY FRANK I. SOLAR



How to Make Three Camp Accessories

Finding a good bed is one of the biggest problems of a camp or an all-night hike. The tick, shown here, makes a fine mattress when filled with hay or straw. The bonfire fork and corn handles are also just the thing to have on your camping trip or automobile tour. All three of these articles have shown their worth by actual test use in a large boys' camp.

To make the bag, cut a piece of strong ticking twelve feet, eight inches long. Hem the ends of the cloth, turning in the five-eighths-inch tapes nine inches long, with the hem, as at A and B. Pin the tape in place to hold it until the hem can be stitched on the sewing machine. Sew the other tapes in place. Stitch the edges with the bag turned inside out. The completed tick can be rolled into a very small bundle and carried to camp.

Real Camping Trip Helps

With the big camping season here, every camper and hiker is looking for practical camping aids. These three articles are "the real thing," used by experienced campers. They'll be handy for your trip.

No camp is complete without the campfire, and campfires mean roasted corn, and toasted marshmallows. The "bonfire fork" shown here, and made of an old table fork hammered solidly into a pipe end, will make an excellent instrument to use for holding things to cook over the fire.

Roasted corn on the cob is always awkward to handle. These handy corn holders are quickly made by driving brads into the handles, as shown, and filing the heads to points so that they will go into the cobs easily.

NO USE FOR THEM

A family moved into Arkansas, and as they had been accustomed to keeping everything under lock and key they brought their locks with them. Having a substantial looking tool house, the head of the family put a big lock on the door. The neighbors for miles around dropped in to look them over, but seemed to be in a hostile frame of mind after one visit. Finally a delegation of leading farmers called on the man of the house.

"Why did you move among us if you thought we were as bad as you try to make out?" they asked.

"Bad? Why, I have the best kind of an opinion of you people."

"Well, then, why do you lock your toolhouse? Don't you know that nobody in Arkansas ever stole anything to work with?"—[Judge.

HUNTING CLUB IS PROPOSED IN HEART OF GAME REFUGE ESTABLISHED IN LOUISIANA

SOME twelve years ago conservationists were elated over the purchase by Mrs Russell Sage of 73,000 acres of Louisiana gulf coast land, which she dedicated as a wild-life refuge. A couple of years later John D. Rockefeller purchased 85,000 acres of land along the gulf coast, and this, too, was turned into a wild life sanctuary. Again conservationists rejoiced and applauded these two great contributions to posterity. And the rejoicing has been justified, for these gulf coast lands are a paradise for migratory birds of all kinds, especially duck, geese, snipe and quail, and there are deer and bear as well.

This was the first time the writer ever heard of Edward A. McIlhenny of Avery Island, La., but I remember at the time I thought how fine it was that largely through his efforts the Sage and Rockefeller fortunes had been interested to so large an extent in wild-life conservation.

In the fall of 1923 I heard for the first time of an area comprising 109,000 acres along the Louisiana gulf coast that was to be used by a proposed hunting club which was to have 4000 members, and much to my surprise I discovered that Mr. McIlhenny was the promoter of this organization. Later I was sent a beautifully lithographed booklet of the Louisiana Gulf Coast club which proposed to sell memberships at $1000 each. Investigation disclosed that the Louisiana Gulf Coast lands lay between the Sage Wild Life refuge and the Rockefeller refuge, and even a wooden Indian could see what it would mean to the water fowl of that region.

Indignant Protest

SOON afterward such widely known conservationists as Henry W. DeForest; Madison Grant, vice president of the Zoological society; W. T. Hornaday, president of the Permanent Wild Life Protective fund; John N. Phillips, president of the Pennsylvania State game commission; Edmund Seymour, president of the American Bison society; J. A. McGuire, editor of Outdoor Life; Charles Dana Gibson, publisher of Life, and the great newspapers burst into indignation, and for a time the press harshly condemned the scheme.

Governor Parker of Louisiana received letters by the score from indignant sportsmen all over the nation. The Governor condemned the whole scheme as "destructive to our Louisiana bird life." He might have said "destructive to the whole nation's water fowl life."

Then practically all widely known men on the advisory board of the club resigned, and we thought at headquarters that surely this death trap would die because of the righteous indignation of sportsmen everywhere. But the promoters have not quit, despite the storm of protest coming from principled sportsmen everywhere.

From the beginning it seemed perfectly obvious to us at game conservation headquarters that the rational course to pursue was to purchase these 109,000 acres and join them to the 85,000-acre Rockefeller tract and the 73,000-acre Sage tract and thus avert the prospective catastrophe to all migratory birds.

We knew that eminent sportsmen with more than enough of this world's goods were interested.

Land Price Boosted

MR. McILHENNY in a letter to Henry W. DeForest stated he would sell out for $925,000, or almost $10 an acre. This offer was promptly declined. The Rockefeller and Sage tracts had cost but a trifle over $2 an acre. There are 158,000 acres in these two tracts and they cost $383,000. The Gulf Coast club wanted $925,000 for a tract approximately 50,000 smaller of identically the same type of land! And he proposed to reserve enough land for a hunting club of 150 members. Also the conservationists were given but eight days to raise the $925,000.

The club, meanwhile, went merrily on its way and continued to send out pages of advertising, alleging that if the club were not formed and put under regulation and law that all the wild fowl would be killed off and that the club was really a "conservation measure." This, too, notwithstanding that Mr. De Forest had pointed out to Gov. Parker that "desultory hunting of wild fowl in that area by unorganized hunters, while regrettable, does not operate destructively against the purposes of these sanctuaries, but a large club, shooting persistently in what would seem a baited deathtrap for wild fowl, is quite another matter."

A look at the map will convince anyone just what this club means. Think of 4000 guns, or 2000 guns, or 1000 guns, or 500 guns, or even 250 guns—each legally killing the limit of ducks and geese and snipe for ninety days. Will it not indubitably mean the greatest slaughter pen in the world for wild fowl?

Disapproved Plan

THE Association of Audubon societies at its meeting October 30, 1923, expressed their disapproval of the clubian. President T. Gilbert Pearson, writing in Bird Life, the official organ of this great national organization of bird lovers, says:

"Acting on the expressed wish of the members, the president of the association entered into correspondence with Edward A. McIlhenny of Avery Island, Chicago, who is the chief promoter of this proposed Louisiana Gulf Coast club. In his final offer, Mr. McIlhenny stated that the price for the land, if bought by conservationists, would be $1,007,790.

"As a result of inquiries, and with some knowledge gathered from past experiences of the cost of waste marshlands in that part of the county, we were forced to the conclusion that the price asked by Mr. McIlhenny, representing the Gulf Coast club, was enormously in excess of the actual cost. We, therefore, requested of McIlhenny a bill of particulars, showing just what he had agreed to pay to the different owners for the territory under discussion. Mr. McIlhenny, however, flatly refused to divulge this information. Everyone interested in the matter would be quite willing that he should have a fair percentage above actual expenses, but under the existing circumstances we do not feel justified in asking the public to contribute to a fund for the purchase of the land when the sum asked was perhaps much more than 100 per cent in excess of the actual cost."

Condemned by League

AFTER all, the best judges of the merits and demerits of the "conservation scheme" of the Louisiana Gulf Coast club are Louisiana sportsmen themselves. They are on the ground and know the situation by personal contact. I quote portions of the resolutions adopted by the Louisiana Sportsmen's league. I am informed that an attorney of Mr. McIlhenny labored for two hours to dissuade the league from taking the action.

"Aside from the selfish interest which the 1000 members of this league have in the conservation of wild fowl," the resolution reads, "we feel that we owe it as a duty to the sportsmen of this country to protest this proposal and combat it by all legitimate means.

"The good faith of the State of Louisiana is pledged to the protection of these game refuges which have been entrusted to this State . . .

"The establishment of the Louisiana Gulf Coast club, or any similar club with large membership, on lands immediately adjacent to the Rockefeller, Sage and State game refuges, should not be permitted, and should be condemned by all sportsmen here and elsewhere . . . . ."—[William H. Dilg in Outdoor America.

Hill of Dreams

I know a happy little hill.
  Where red, red roses swoon,
And breezes blow so still, so still
  Under the wan white moon.

This is a hill of heaven I know
  Beside a purple sea,
Where the pale stars plunge in the waves below,
  Singing of mystery.

This little hill is my hill of dream,
  Where I linger the long night through,
Alone with the sea and the stars a-gleam,
  The roses, the moon, and you.

Scarecrows Out of Job

Just recently the hunters of Antelope and Madison counties, Nebraska, organized a crow-killing contest. The time was one month and the losing group was to entertain the winner. We do not know who won, but that matters little for our purpose here. The big fact is that 35,000 crows were killed in that one month.—[Sportsman's Digest.

COPING WITH THE MASSIVE APE

call for men to collect material and work it up into traps and nets. I was so impatient to be off up the river and after my orang-utans—I already thought of them as mine—that I left the completion and the setting of the nets to Munshee.

The people of Omar's kampong were even more kindly and simple, if that were possible, than those of Munshee's. It hurt me to pose before them as a magician with my dynamite and fireworks, but again I played the part.

One young fellow—Usup was his name—seemed to be fascinated by the performance. He took my orders afterward with a sort of reverence, as if I were a god. His companions caught his spirit. I never had a more willing corps of workers.

I explained to Omar that my pet dream was a good-sized male orang and that I hoped to get him by a trap placed in a tree. With my usual diagrams in the sand I made it clear that this type of trap would be shaped like a box, with one end a door which would slide up and down in grooves. From the middle of each side an upright would extend above the box, to meet a connecting crosspiece. Over this would rest, like a seesaw, the pole that held the door up. A piece of bamboo, fastened to the free end of the pole (the end not attached to the door) would be thrust down through the top of the cage and held there by a catch. To this catch I would tie a bit of fruit.

Two Orangs at a Hotel

AN ORANG, grabbing the fruit, would loosen the catch and release the pole, and down would drop the door. At the top of the door were strong catches, which locked it, once it fell into place. I saw to it that there were no weak spots; for I was not going to risk repeating a troublesome experience I had had once in Singapore.

On that occasion I had sold two half-grown beasts to a man who put them into shipping-cages made of boards. He got the permission of Mr. Haas, the hotel proprietor, to leave them temporarily at the hotel, in a hall used for theatrical performances and fitted up with a stage and canvas scenery.

In the Canvas Forest

EARLY one morning I was routed out of bed by the bad news that both orangs had got loose. Would I come and catch them? As I threw on my clothes, I gave orders for a lot of men with as many rattan canes as they could get hold of and every tom-tom they could lay their hands on. My rickshaw coolie, who was waiting for me, looked half-dazed but he covered the distance to the hotel in record time.

The animals were out of their cages, but they were still in the hall with the doors and windows closed. There were a half-dozen natives—hotel servants—ready to help in the chase. Each had a cane and most of them had tom-toms. But one fellow—I believe he was the cook—was swinging a great tin dishpan in one hand and a metal spoon in the other.

I took a tom-tom and a cane, opened the door and closed it behind me. The orangs, a male and a female, each four or five years old, were making a tour of investigation. They were like fish out of water. Their element was trees. They were at home only where tree touched tree and water was to be found in the cups of leaves.

There in the hall they slowly walked around, their heads turning and their little dark eyes blinking. When they stood erect, their arms, enormously long, touched the floor. With their hands half-closed, they walked on their knuckles, using their arms very much like a pair of crutches.

When they saw me, they stopped their awkward walk, huddled together and stared. I struck the tom-tom once. Each threw up an arm as if to ward off a blow. "Ouf!" they said, in their gruff voices. "Ouf!"

I called the men in. "Drive them into the open cages," I directed. "Do not strike unless absolutely necessary, but make a noise like hell let loose."

What I should have done was to set all my assistants as a guard before the stage. The orangs could not spring from the ground like monkeys, but with amazing speed they hobbled across the floor, got on the platform and climbed up, up into the canvas trees. They clung there, looking down on us and snarling.

"Beat!" I yelled to the men. "More noise!"

I was enough of a carpenter to know what the result would be. The orangs swung from one painted limb to another. Rip went the canvas in a long tear; crack, and down came the flimsy framework. The orangs fell with a bump.

They were hurt no more than if they had been rubber balls. In a moment they were swinging from another canvas tree. As it began to tear and snap, they reached out their long arms and grabbed a fresh one. They changed their positions every second until what had been a romantic, semi-tropical set was ribbons and rags. Above the din of the tom-toms I heard yelling and a pounding on the outside of the door.

"You can't come in!" I yelled back.

It was Mr. Haas, the proprietor. "Take care of my scenery!" he shouted. "Don't let anything happen to it."

"I'll do my best!" I bawled.

The Potential Sliver

WHEN there were no more canvas trees left, we got in our work. We used all the noise there was and some caning. The male orang got hold of the bamboo stick I was using. I did not dispute ownership. I let him have it and took another. In a moment he dropped his. He could have had things his own way if he had got after us with it.

The outstanding fact about the creatures was that they had enormous strength with no knowledge of how to use it. We were pretty much worn out by the time we had driven them into their cages. It was warm work for the tropics. The orangs sucked up long drafts of fresh water, ate jackfruit and said "Ouf," as if they too had had a great time.

It was plain how they had got out, or at least how the male had got out. In his cage of planks he had found a loose sliver and had amused himself by tearing it off with his great eye-tooth. After that, he tore another and another until he had practically chewed through the wood. Then he broke it. I decided that, once out, he must have loosened the catch on the door of the other cage, accidentally, when climbing over it.

Omar had a half-dozen more traps—of bamboo, on which no tooth could start a sliver—made like the model built under my eye. To put a trap in place took a whole day in the jungle. The tree was not one in which there was the sleeping-platform, or nest, which only orangs use, but it was never far away from such a nest, and there had to be a convenient fork on which to bind the trap.

It was Usup, as a rule, who found the right tree. He seemed to have a sort of instinct for it. Once he had found it, he would place his notched bamboo pole against the trunk and go up like a cat. Three or four other men would follow. Then the trap, hauled up with rattan ropes, was laced to the fork, the door facing inward. In the end the trap was as firm as if it had grown to the tree.

Next it was lined with leaves and branches and covered with green stuff and trailing vines. And finally Usup tied fruit inside at the back and propped the door open. The trap was not set.

My idea was to make free-lunch stations of the traps until confidence was established. I believed that no orang would be tempted to go in until he had seen the monkeys try it and come out safely.

Monkeys never make a discovery in silence and they never fail to squabble over one. Their chattering would attract the attention of the orangs. Once the orangs were interested, they would drive the monkeys away. Eventually we put up seven traps within an area of a half-mile square. We visited them every two days and, if the fruit was gone, we replaced it.

When our fruit began to disappear regularly, it was time to set the traps. Any branches that obstructed the movement of the doors were cut away, and fresh fruit was hung. Usup insisted each time on getting in and trapping himself, to be sure that all was right. The trap with which he took the greatest pains was one which he hung with guavas.

A Cause for Elation

THE next day the door of this particular trap was down. Usup climbed the tree and peered in. He did not shout to us, for he had been forbidden to, but I could see from the movements of his agile body that he was elated. No wonder! I discovered, when the trap was lowered, that we had made a double haul. A mother orang was inside, with a baby hanging to the hair on her breast. I was as elated as Usup. I knew, as he did not, that they would make a most marketable pair.

On our return to the kampong, it was almost impossible for me to prevent a demonstration that would have terrified the orangs. The early days of captivity were trying times for them and anxious ones for me. I knew the natives would not understand consideration for the beasts; so I hit upon the idea of bad ears for myself. I put my hands to the sides of my head and told Omar to say that the tuan had ear-sickness, so that any noise was to him like the rolling of thunder. The place was suddenly as quiet as an empty church.

When the orang with her baby was shut up in the cage, she was in a fury. Her mouth was twisted in a perpetual snarl. I sent every one away and put in charge the old man who had given the war cry. No one was allowed to come even to the fence placed round the shed by my order. The mother orang was given boiled water but no food.

That was a trick I had learned. If food is pressed at once on a captured orang, nine times out of ten it will refuse to eat, will continue to refuse and will mope. But if it is allowed to get really hungry and is then offered food, it will eat and cheer up. In many ways the orang is very human. In a short time this one took kindly to the old man. She lost her bad temper, but she was never happy as a monkey seems to be in captivity.

Later on, I kept in the cage next the mother and her young one a small orang captured under strange and terrible circumstances, which confirmed me in my opinion that orang-utans are not solitary animals.

We started from the kampong that day a party of sixteen. There were many traps to visit and we separated into groups. Omar and six other natives went with me. After inspecting two empty traps, we came upon one in which there was a good-sized male. Just as we had succeeded in lowering it to the ground, we heard cries for help. Two natives, breathless with running, gasped out broken sentences that I could not understand.

Tragic Tidings

THEIR bodies were torn and bleeding. They had plunged through the jungle regardless of thorns. I had caught the names of Usup and Abdul. Omar translated. Usup and Abdul had been killed.

The headman sounded the alarm, calling out strange words that ended with something like the wail of the Dyak battle cry. This was to summon every man within earshot.

Meanwhile the panting runners spoke a few sentences in the jerky Dyak way, and Omar managed to get their meaning and to convey it to me in Malay. It seems that a group of four men, Usup among them, had found a trap occupied. Usup had climbed up to it with a rush. He peeped in between the cracks and called down that the orang was a very young one. With his parang he began to cut the rattan that held the trap. Before the other men had joined him in the tree, the mother orang, who had been hiding in the upper branches, dropped on him and buried her teeth in his shoulder.

He clutched the cage, which fell, carrying him and the female with it. His head struck the ground, and the cage came down on his crumpled body.

On "White Man's Business"

THE other men hurried to the rescue. With a yell they thrust their spears into the female orang. It was Abdul who was directly under the tree. Without any cry of warning a great male orang dropped upon the poor fellow's shoulders and bore him to the ground, biting deep at the base of his neck, then twisting his head with its strong paws and killing him.

The two survivors thought the jungle was alive with orangs. Yet in spite of their fear and exhaustion, they went back with us. Omar was in the lead. I followed with my express-rifle set and ready

Suddenly the headman stopped and pointed. I saw what I shall never be able to forget. Under the trap, which was lying door downwards, was Usup's body. The wounded female was tearing at the bars and trying to let her young one out. The male was jumping up and down on Abdul's body.

With one paw he grasped the Dyak's thick hair and, as he jumped, he raised the head and shoulders from the ground. I fired and shot him dead. Before I could train my gun on the female, she dropped from her own wounds.

The double tragedy filled me with a sense of guilt. Usup had heeded no warnings. He had climbed the tree without looking to see if there were free orangs in it. He was on the white man's business, and the white man was a witch-doctor. Usup met his death through false confidence, and this, I felt, he had gained from the miracle of red and green lights.

Early Outlaws of Texas

There is very little known about the early outlaws of Texas other than what is written in the "blood-and-thunder" stories that one finds on the shelves of second-hand books in some of the book stores. Most of these stories are out of print now, and at that time these men were better known away from home than they were at home.

The outlaws that used to have Texas as their playground were active during the Civil War and into the 70s and 80s. There have been so many versions of their lives that it is a hard matter to know exactly what they really did. They received the name of outlaws in the majority of cases because of the thirst for revenge that arose over some injury received by them or some member of their family during or after the trials of the war. This was the case with Sam Bass, John Wesley Hardin, and I think of King Fisher, but am not certain as I have been unable to find any record about his early life.

There was a family of Fishers in Red River county, Texas, during the war. The father was captured by bushwackers and had his finger and toe nails pulled out and his tongue cut off. That would have been a good reason for sons to start on a hunt for revenge.

Ben Thompson was another bad man with his guns. He was an officer, though, and did his killing, so he claimed, in line of duty. Many had it in for him, and so he finally got his in the back while taking a drink. The followers of these men were never of any large number—twelve to fifteen was a large gang—but the numbers changed from time to time; about six companions were an average-size gang.—[J. W. SUNDAY MORNING, JUNE 1, 1924.

A Little Song in John King's Paper

ONE night in our little high house in the hills we were talking with our neighbor, the man who reads the papers, about newspapers in general and the newspapers of Southern California in particular.

Not of the great metropolitan newspapers of the roaring towns alone, but of what is called the "country newspapers" also did we talk together—our well-beloved old neighbor and ourself.

And the man who reads the papers was saying that you can't find better papers anywhere, or maybe as good, as you will find in Southern California. And, to prove it, what did he do but take from his pocket a copy of John King's paper, printed away out yonder under the glow of old San Jacinto in the luring little town of Hemet.

Now, said our neighbor, here is an example of what a good newspaper can be made to be in a country town. And he went over it column by column, pointing out its features from his vast experiences.

Well, sir, having the name of being a newspaper man ourself, and desiring never to be known by a better name, we were deeply interested in all that our neighbor had to say.

And especially were we interested in a little song that John King had printed, that week, in his paper.

It was a song about Joy. And how there was a fellow who was so constituted that he just naturally took to gloom the same as a duck takes to water. And he kept a-going like a house afire all the time to get away from imaginary calamities that he was sure were always at his heels.

So, one day when he was all out of breath and was sitting down on a log or something to get his second wind, as the saying is, who did he see sitting on the log beside him but Joy with her shining face. And the song winds up with Joy saying to the calamity man:

"I've caught you at last, old fellow, but gee
Why did you run so fast from me?"

Gosh, it was a fine little song, and it was just like John King to print it in his paper. And isn't it the truth—that Joy has a hard time of it trying to catch up with some people?

Joy wants to catch up with everybody. It chases breathlessly on the heels of every man and woman in the world, wanting to be friendly and chummy with them. But, there are many folks—alas, so very many—who run away from Joy.

It is a big mistake. And the thing to do is always to keep looking over your shoulder for Joy, and to whistle for it to come and join you in your journey through life.

The Hurry and Scurry Of a Mad Age

IT WAS one day when we had gone trapesing the length of a great high road to a little town to make a speech for a Rotary Club that we thought of how mad is the age in which we live with its hurry and its scurry.

We had traveled a hundred miles and had taken a whole day that would never come back again to spend twenty minutes making a speech to forty men.

There was not enough time at the meeting even to get well acquainted with the men who were present—all fine men, too, and good fellows. But as busy as the dickens. Or at least they had jollied themselves into thinking that they were as busy as the dickens.

We asked them what they were in such a hurry about, and didn't they know that time was made for slaves? We asked them why they didn't take the whole day for the meeting, and they answered and said that they were too busy.

The meeting commenced on the tick of the clock, exactly and promptly at a quarter after twelve. Twenty-two minutes exactly were allowed to consume the meal—a good meal that at least an hour should be spent upon. Then four minutes and no more were allowed to a man to sing a song. And then the president of the club put a clock in front of us and told us to "shoot" but that if we hadn't stopped talking exactly at 1:30 he would ring a bell on us.

Gosh, we thought, if this world isn't going plumb crazy, then we don't know anything about it. Singing with a rush, eating with a rush, talking with a rush—and a Yankee alarm clock staring you in the face every minute of the time and waiting to ring a bell on you if you don't stop when they tell you to do so.

In the old days in California a whole day would have been spent to hold a meeting like the meeting that was started and ended in an hour and a quarter at the club to which we journeyed and which took us a whole day of time that will never, never come back.

Well Remembered in the Land He Loved

HAVING twice lately wandered in caravans up and down the whole length of California, we were struck by the many evidences of the remembrance of Fray Junipero Serra in the land he loved and where his sacred dust sleeps under the sheltering eaves of his own beloved Mission of Carmel.

There is a fine marble statue of him at Monterey which was erected by the late Mrs. Leland Stanford. There is a shallop at his feet and a conquering cross in his hands. It is an eloquent tribute to our great apostle by a sweet-souled woman who was not of his creed but who reverenced him for the deeds that he had done.

Then there is a statue in Golden Gate Park which is perhaps known better than any other, if only for the reason that so many more people see it. There is also a statue in the patio of the Mission San Gabriel, and another in the patio of the Mission San Juan Capistrano. And, besides these statues, there are the Serra crosses—the first and greatest of them on Mt. Rubidoux at Riverside erected by Frank Miller and the people of his city. There is also the cross on the old Presidio Hill at San Diego made from the broken tiles of the fallen roof of the first white man's habitation on the western shores of our America. And the great cross on that tall shining hill back of the Mission San Buenaventura.

No doubt there are still others which we fail here to recall.

So, we see that as time passes, the memory of the great founder of our civilization and Christianity in this golden land is enduringly conserved. He is not forgotten in the land he loved, nor will he ever be forgotten. Each succeeding generation in California will build some new memorial of him. And, best of all, he shall be still more lovingly and enduringly remembered in the hearts of the people of the peerless commonwealth the rafters of which he reared.

The Land Of Dreams

Come, my dear, and sail with me,
And we will pick from the great dream tree
Dreams of every hue.

Then over a sea of silver we'll float;
The new moon will be our fairy boat
As we sail, and sail away.

We'll stop at the "milky-way" for a drink—
The cows will be going home, I think,
About the time we reach there!

We'll visit the "big" and "little bear,"
And Orion, the giant, who lives up there,
And not be a bit afraid!

And then as our boat slips down in the west,
We'll think of our home, how we love it best—
And come back from the land of dreams.

A Bird's Nest in a Sheltering Arm

IT WAS nesting time, and where did we find ourself one day but in Golden Gate Park in San Francisco. And while we were there we thought we would go and take a look at the statue of Fray Junipero Serra which was chiseled out of the dreams of the deaf and dumb sculptor Tilden.

You might travel the world over and never see a finer statue in memory of any man than this statue of our great Fray Junipero. And certainly you could travel to the end of the world and back again and never see a more wonderful public park than this which is at the Golden Gate.

It was a grand morning in the springtime of the year. The sky was bright and blue above the City of St. Francis throned on thrice its seven hills. And, stretching away with its running tides to mystical Cathay, was the great Pacific, Mother of the Seas.

We followed many a winding pathway of flame with terraced banks of rhododendrons. And there were green meadows to cross, and little glimmering lakes to pass. And great forests of clustering trees. It was a grand day on which to be alive and a grand place in which to be.

And so at last, we came to that wide green spot from which arises the heroic statue of Fray Junipero, California's beloved and immortal apostle. The gaunt, wandering Franciscan who bore in his beautiful rough brown hands the torch of civilization and Christianity to the desolation of a heathen land.

Well, sir, you would never think what it was that happened the very moment that we came to the statue of Fray Junipero. We saw a brown bird flying around it, followed by another, and pretty soon they showed us where they had builded a nest that was filled with young. And where would the nest be but right in the sheltering hollow of Fray Junipero's arm.

We had often thought that Fray Junipero was very much like St. Francis himself—Francis of Assisi, who preached to the birds on the dusty roads of Umbria long ago. The birds that clustered upon his shoulders and in the folds of his tunic when he talked to them, loving to listen to the gentle words that he had to say. The birds that used to carry leaves to cover him to keep him warm when he would lie down at night on the ground.

So, here now was the follower of Francis commemorated in bronze in a stretch of green lawn in the city that was named for St. Francis. And in the sheltering hollow of his arm birds have builded their nest, as though knowing there could be no safer or more loving place for them to rear their young.

It was an experience that we shall long remember, and we thought that all those who sit in our far-flung synagogue this blessed Sabbath morning would like for us to tell them about it.

One Indian Who Has A Big Job

INSPIRED, no doubt, by the knowledge that white men have helped themselves along a good bit by forming associations in business, the Mission Indians have formed a federation. It meets every so often at Riverside under the patronage of our old friends, Mr. Jonathan Tibbet.

It is, of course, the hope of every decent and justice-loving American citizen that the Mission Indian Federation will somehow in some way succeed in righting the nameless wrongs and awful injustices that the Indian people have been compelled to submit to.

We have been interested in the scope and the ramifications that the federation aims at. And we have been pleased to note that the organization has been planned on approved and well-tried lines. There are officers, and also the customary standing committees on finance, laws, police, entertainment and so on, each committee having its duly selected chairman.

As we went down the list of the official roster that had been sent to us, and we came to the committee on "Grievances" with an Indian named Calac as chairman, we said, well, here is one Indian with a real job on his hands. His job is to keep tab on the grievances of his people. And, if that isn't a man's-sized job, we would like for you to tell us why.

The grievances of the Indians of California! They are as many as the sands of the sea. Grievances red with blood and aching with a century of wrong. Deep, horrible things, the grievances of broken hearts and tortured souls.

It is a thing we scarcely dare permit ourselves to think of—this Indian question—knowing how shameful it is, and how helpless we are to make it right. It is the one and only stain upon the flag, and the one and only thing that prevents us from being wholly and unconditionally proud that we are an American.

that makes hunger for drugs so strong. It is not lack of liquor, but use of tobacco that has seduced so many recent victims to drugs. No man was ever a drunkard who was not first addicted to tobacco.

"The flamboyant advertising lately resorted to by manufacturers to debauch our youth by cigarettes is reprehensible beyond words. It should be the effort of every father and mother and good citizen to antagonize such malicious commercialism that would eventually reduce our proud America to the status of Mexico and China.

"Much might be said on the subject. Sapientibus satis est dictum. If men knew the debilitating effects of tobacco upon sexual virility, few would ever acquire the habit.

"I never saw a child wearing spectacles, with few exceptions, whose father had not used tobacco. Can this be called a coincidence?"

Diet in Old Age

FOLLOWING is from the Vegetarian Magazine:

"As old age advances constipation usually increases. To overcome this is to prolong life and make that life more useful and cheerful under the usual food system.

"This tendency is probably largely due to a change in the walls of the intestines which can be overcome by proper foods.

"Many old people have the sour-milk or buttermilk fetish, drinking large quantities, which appears to help them, but it must be remembered that the peasants who use such foods are active, outdoor workers, and all their lives lived very simply, such habits being more conducive to longevity than simply drinking sour milk. We would advise the natural-food regime, instead, with plenty of exercise, air baths as much as possible, along with the water baths, remaining out doors and keeping warm.

"Old people do not generate the amount of heat that young ones do and must add more body covering, but of a porus kind, which will permit ventilation of the skin. Gentle exercise also is needed, and this old people usually avoid.

"Sunlight is a rejuvenator! All life depends upon sunshine. Human life is no exception. If we lived outdoors all the time we would get the benefits of the solar rays. Living in houses if we had glass houses, health would greatly improve.

"Sunlight helps digestion. It vitalizes every cell of the body. Throw away all the therapeutic apparatus and have sunshine instead and the human race would experience a marvelous change for the better.

"If old people would seek the sunshine, discard clothes, when possible, taking air baths, eat fruits, green leaf vegetables at all times, put through kitchen grinder nuts and such things as are not easily chewed, but always being fitted with teeth, as well, old age would not be the bugaboo it so often is.

"If raisins cannot be properly chewed, pass them through a grinder, eat plentifully of them. They furnish heat, energy, and minerals. Sugars and fats produce heat. This element old people especially require. Heat produced by such sweets and natural sugars as furnished by fruits and honey is to be desired rather than that by fats. Such sugars are more easily assimilated. Starches should, by all means, be abandoned by anyone after thirty years of age. Uncooked starches, as found in bananas and a few such natural foods, do not come under this head.

"Laxative foods are melons, berries, prunes, raisins, well-masticated vegetables, always in the raw state, all tree fruits, green leaf herbs, as lettuce, etc. Cooked mushes we would strongly advise against. Bread may be taken in small quantities, if made of any entire grain. Bran and bran breads prove too irritating to the delicate membranes of the intestines and work great injury. If greatly desired, such foods as wheat, hulless oats, or barley, may be cooked several hours in the oven and eaten very carefully and slowly, but not eaten with milk or cream—honey or a little vegetable butter instead. Peanut butter, it should be remembered, is more of a protein than fat, and takes the place of flesh food, which people fancy imparts strength.

Lemonade, sweetened with honey, either warm or cool is always an excellent drink. Flaxseed tea is another good drink.

"The entire legume family, except peanuts, we would eliminate from the dietary of the aged, especially so as they must be cooked. The hulls of legumes prove indigestible, and all legumes contain a certain amount of uric acid, tending toward development of rheumatism and kindred maladies.

"While legumes run high in protein, nuts also furnish this element and are devoid of elements contained in legumes. But it must be remembered that a low protein diet is necessary, especially for aged people."

"Means of Grace"

JUST as many good, honest people believe that the only road to spiritual salvation lies by the way of the "means of grace" furnished by the Methodist, or Catholic, or Presbyterian, or Seventh Day Adventists, or Buddhist, or some other one of the hundreds of religious creeds, so do many good honest healers believe that the only road to physical salvation lies through hydropathy, or electricity, or sweating, or sun and air baths, or massage, or going barefoot, or osteopathy, or chiropractic, or nonmeat diet, or nonstarch diet, or fruit diet, or fasting, or mastication, or eating sand, or rectal dilation, or flushing the colon, or exercise, or relaxation, or sleep, or mental suggestion, or some other form of aiding Nature to restore normal conditions.

I believe in all these methods—and in some others. I also believe that no one of these methods is sufficient, of itself, or should be made a religion, to the exclusion of all other means of physical salvation. Let all rational healers unite in welcoming and utilizing all methods that aid Nature to restore health, and in opposing all methods that place obstacles in her way, as stuffing, drugging, serum-injecting and the removal of necessary organs of the body.

"United we stand; divided we fall."

The Control of Disease

DR. SIMON FLEXNER, one of the most ardent exploiters of vivisection—or, as they now call it, "medical research"—in an address delivered in a London hospital, threw cold water on the enthusiasm of those who believe that disease is being "conquered" by medical science. He said:

"The idea that the problems of infection are almost solved is erroneous. Some advance has been made, and science is still making progress; but investigators have only scratched the surface. Much greater progress must be made before infectious diseases can be said to be under control."

Yes. And in the meantime, millions of miserable animals will be put to excruciating tortures, and millions of men and women will die prematurely from wrong treatment, based on these futile investigations.

All these vast sums, expended in "medical research," are worse than wasted. They have never saved one human life, but have sent many prematurely to the Great Beyond. The medical fraternity will never "control" disease, because its members do not know what disease is, mistaking the symptoms of nature's curative processes for the disease itself, and proceeding to suppress those curative processes, by putting mineral drugs into the stomach, and foreign matter into the blood, thus giving rise to many other dreadful diseases, worse than those for which these harmful remedies are prescribed.

When, oh, when, will these men of medicine learn the simple fact that nature alone cures, and will do so, whenever given half a chance?

The reactionary allopath, like the reactionary Republican, is dead, only he doesn't know it.

The Nature Cure

FOLLOWING is from "Our Digestion," by Dio Lewis, M.D.:

"Is it not an interesting fact that, while the treatment of disease by medical or other artificial means has constantly changed, the means extolled today being condemned and ridiculed tomorrow, thoughtful physicians of all time have agreed about the natural methods? The most eminent men of every age have agreed, often in minute detail, about the employment of temperance, sleep, cleanliness, sunshine, cheerfulness, etc., etc., in the prevention and cure of disease.

"It is a noteworthy fact that the most distinguished men of every age and of every school have, in the riper years of life, declared for the natural methods, and against the artificial methods. Many of the most eminent might be quoted as leaving to the world, at their death, the testimony, that the world would be better off if there had never been a doctor—that on the whole doctors had proved a curse.

"And yet there can be no doubt that if doctors would practice the natural methods, and teach the divine laws of health incidental to such methods, they would stand high above all other men in their beneficent services to their fellows."

In the fundamental matters of scientific cultivation; of economic roads throughout the agricultural regions, of close and scientific marketing, the farmers of the United States are in general behind the farmers of Germany and France.—[B. F. Yoakum.

How Is Your Health?

The Actinic-Ray

"Remember once and for all time that these rays are not a panacea for all of the ills of human flesh, but that they are ONE of the best methods of treating these ills."

The above quotation from a text book written by a prominent Electro-Therapist only confirms the results obtained at the California Clinorium in the treatment of many ailments with the Actinic Ray.

The Actinic Ray is invisible, having a wave length of not over 4040A and running down to less than 1860A. and are of a vibratory rate that is between the visible violet of the spectrum and the X-Ray.

Rather expensive electrical apparatus is required to produce the Actinic Ray and as they cannot penetrate glass the tubes and applicators are made of quartz.

The effect of the Actinic Ray is both local and constitutional. A decided constitutional effect is produced as there is a chemical and bactericidal action on the blood. These rays penetrate through the body and rejuvenate every part. The hemoglobin or red blood corpuscles of the blood show a decided increase during these treatments indicating that it is a sure method of "putting iron in the system."

Many people suffer from a lowered vitality, lack of enthusiasm and vigor or general debility. In the treatment of these conditions, in Anemia, Auto-Intoxication, Arteriosclerosis, Ductless Gland Diseases, Dyspepsia, Neuritis, Neurasthenia, Rheumatic conditions and Tuberculosis, the Actinic Ray fully justifies all the claims made of it.

Locally it produces profound effects, relieving ugly skin conditions of many years standing. Generally but very few treatments are required and as one lady said, "To be relieved of an itching skin trouble by one two-minute treatment after putting on lotions for three weeks, was little short of a miracle."

Acne, Eczema, Erysipelas, Favus, Herpes, Keloid, Lupus, Naevi, Pruritis and many other annoying and disfiguring skin diseases are quickly relieved by the Actinic Ray.

The California Clinorium uses two Actinic Ray treatment equipments and they are busy all day long. A visit to this institution is well worth while as it is the largest and best equipped on the Pacific Coast, occupying an entire building with over 4000 feet of floor space.

Consultation is free and the rates for treatment are within the reach of everyone. The California Clinorium, 1001 W. Washington St. BEacon 3201. Dr. Louis C. Shingle, D.P., Managing Director.

Two Weeks' Notice

By Jack Bechdolt

AMOS BIRD, general manager of the Eureka Manufacturing Company, began the day in high good humor. He rang for Miss Lee, the stenographer, and after his customary brisk smile and snappy "Good morning," proceeded as follows:

"Take this, please, and make four copies. Send one to that engrosser who did the presentation resolution for us last Christmas and have him do it on genuine vellum. Tell him to put his very best artist on it and make it a first-class job in every way, but—er—tell him he must submit his cost figure to me for O. K. We can't have him putting anything over on us! Ready, Miss Lee?"

Miss Lee nodded.

"By the Board of Directors of the Eureka Manufacturing Company," Bird dictated; "put that in capital letters, Miss Lee. Be it Resolved—" Bird tipped back in his chair, stared intently at the ceiling and rubbed his chin thoughtfully, seeking inspiration. Finally he proceeded slowly, amending here and there:

"It is with a sense of irreparable loss that the board has this day accepted the resignation of Mr. John Smith, founder and for twenty-five years president of the Eureka Manufacturing Company. It is only our recognition of the fact that for the encroachment of old age and failing health no man is—No, never mind that! Cut that out about old age, Miss Lee! Er—well, it is only our recognition—make it reluctant recognition, Miss Lee—of circumstances which no man can alter which reconciles us to parting with the services of a man whose life work has been the upbuilding of the fortunes of this company. We feel this an occasion when we must express, however feebly, our sense of undying gratitude to one who has guided this corporation through the stormy seas of business, across the treacherous shallows—"

Bird paused to allow himself a slight smile of creative joy. That last was good! "Treacherous shallows," he repeated, relishing the words, "and into the sunny—no, sunlit—waters, of commercial prosperity. To Mr. John Smith and his wife this board extends its heartfelt wishes for Mr. Smith's speedy recovery of health and the indefinite continuation of a life of service to his fellow men. And—er—yes, I guess that will do for that, Miss Lee. Er—you have the knack of expression yourself very well, Miss Lee. If you notice any rough spots will you be so kind as to iron them out—edit them, I think is the proper word?"

"Yes, Mr. Bird."

"Thank you, Miss Lee." Bird smiled, then the smile vanished into his usual brisk, business-like look of alertness. "There is just one thing more," he said. "Take this, please. It is brief.

"Mr. Caspar Lansing,

"Eureka Manufacturing Company:

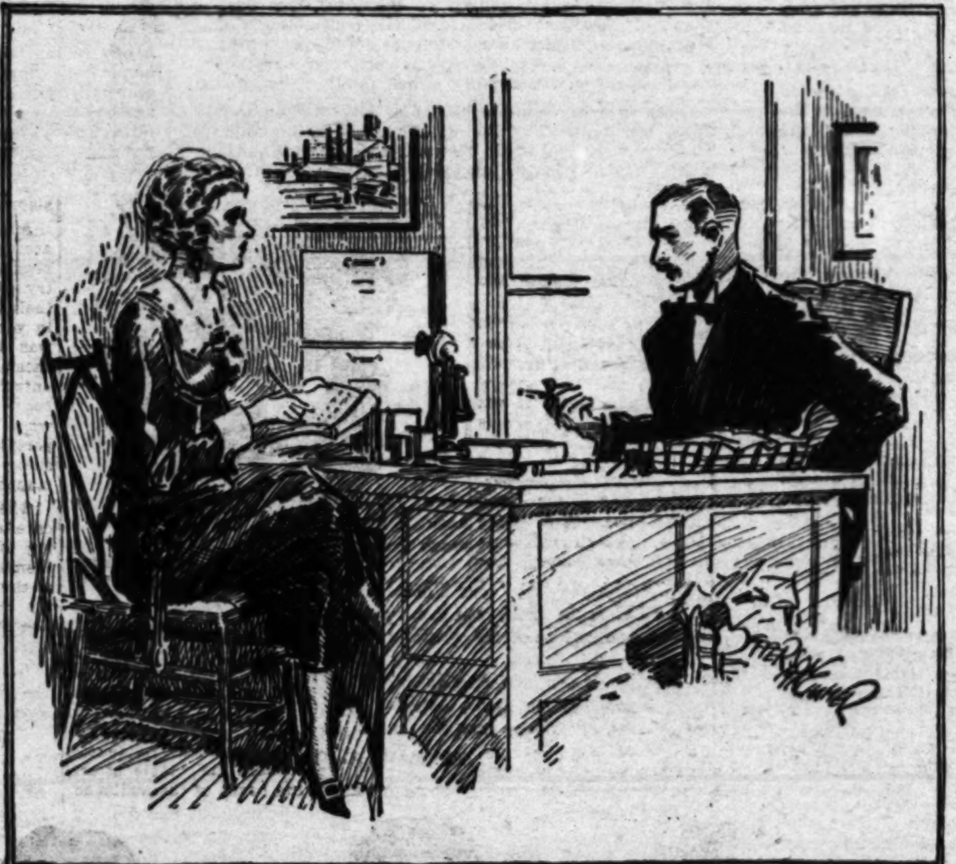
"Dear Sir—I regret to inform you that it will be necessary for us to accept your resignation as assistant sales manager of this company two weeks from date.

"Yours, et cetera."

"That is all," said Bird. "Don't forget to telephone the engrosser about the resolution, Miss Lee. We shall want it at once, before Mr. Smith goes to California."

Departing, Miss Lee for a moment held open the door to Bird's private office and the general manager was afforded a glance into the wide open spaces of the big general offices His eyes swept the desks with a swift, inclusive glance, and what he saw pleased him. They were all young men out there, young, energetic, hustling men, throughout the Eureka organization, all save John Smith, the retiring president, and Caspar Lansing, whose fate he had just settled. Mr. Bird, who had just turned his fortieth birthday and considered himself a very young man, tipped back and surveyed the ceiling with a smile.

"It looks like a good year," he said to the ceiling. "Yes, a very good year! This plant is no longer a home for old men!"



"Thank you, Miss Lee." Bird smiled. Then the smile vanished into his usual brisk, businesslike look of aloftness. "There is just one thing more," he said. "Take this, please. It is brief."

John Smith, the retiring president of the Eureka Manufacturing Company, came out of the directors' room, where the board had just elected Amos Bird to succeed him as president, and entered the general offices. He was a tall spare man, with crisp, crinkly white hair, bushy white eyebrows and keen blue eyes. He was smooth shaven and his face still held the pallor of a recent illness and showed deeply-etched lines about the eyes and nostrils. For all that John Smith stood very erect and moved with a springy, youthful step and all his old-time snap and decision.

John Smith had heard the resolution accepting his resignation and was touched by its expressions of friendship. He concealed his emotions fairly successfully under the cloak of his usual brisk, gruff, good-humored banter with his fellow-directors and took his leave of them as a man should. But he was glad that the board had met late in the afternoon and consequently that the office force had gone home.

John Smith did not care, just then, to face the ordeal of innumerable handshakes and good wishes from the young men of his organization. He was glad to see nobody was in the office except Miss Lee, the stenographer, bent over her machine, and old Caspar Lansing, the assistant sales manager. He strode, with a nod and cheery "Good night" past Miss Lee, to Lansing's desk.

Lansing was facing several hours of overtime work, checking up new sales orders. He had paused to eat a sandwich taken from the pocket of his tattered office coat.

Lansing was a short, stubby, bald-headed little man. He had the round, bland, snub-nosed face of a cheerful baby, and if he had shaved off his short, gray mustache and removed his glasses he might have substituted in any perambulator without arousing undue suspicion.

John Smith paused at Lansing's desk and extended his hand. "Well, Caspar!"

Lansing sprang to his feet, grasping the hand hard. "Goodby, Johnny; goodby! I—I'm sorry you're leaving us—"

"We can't help getting old, Caspar. You damn fraud, you're not so young yourself, but you manage to keep Bird fooled somehow!"

Caspar's eyes twinkled. "Oh, me!" he exclaimed, "I'm too insignificant. He's forgot me, I guess. So you're off to California for a whole year!"

Smith's eyes clouded a little. "Doctor's orders," he said gruffly. "Complete rest. Do nothing, say nothing, think nothing, that's what it amounts to. And, confound him, he's cut off my smoking, too! Here, have a cigar, Caspar, take 'em all—I can't use 'em!"

"Why, Johnny, you—you're a lucky man!" Lansing tried to make his voice ring with conviction. "A year in California! No work, no worry. Lie in bed as long as you like. No time clock to punch. Nothing, you lucky dog!"

"You damn old liar!" Smith snapped. "Caspar, I put the best of my life into this business, and you know it. Remember the time we had the little loft down on Marginal street and our total capital was two hundred and twenty-five dollars? Remember that? And how you used to keep the books and pack orders and boss the shop while I was out trying to collect enough to pay your wages? I tell you, boy, we hustled in those days, eh? And it was fun! It's always been fun for me, Caspar—"

"It's been pretty good fun for me, too," Lansing acknowledged, rubbing his bald head thoughtfully.

"Of course it has! Fun! Why not? Haven't we built up something? Haven't we had the fun of making it grow—making a howling success of it? Haven't we both put our best years into it until it's got to be our life interest? Now I've got to get out because of a couple of old women doctors and a fool wife. But you! You lucky stiff, you can keep on here, keep up the good work! Oh, you lucky old dog!"

John Smith clasped Lansing's hand hard and turned away without more ado, unable to go on with his farewell. And Lansing watched him out of the office, rubbing his bald head thoughtfully with that soothing, circular motion he used to calm a perturbed mind.

"Poor old Johnny! he murmured. "He hates to quit! So would I! Yes, sir, so would I. Thank God, I'm not important enough for that!"

Miss Lee, coated and hatted and ready to go home, her hand holding a bundle of belated letters which she would mail at the chute in the hall, paused at his desk to drop one of her missives where it would meet his eye. It was the curt note Bird had dictated that morning.

John Smith's troubles had begun with a dish of lobster salad. He had eaten the salad at the house of his married daughter in Englewood late one evening, and when he drove his wife home he was looking very thoughtful. He looked even more thoughtful and said no more than was absolutely necessary when he departed for the Eureka offices at eight-thirty next morning. In the middle of the morning and during a conference with Amos Bird, John Smith fainted dead away in his chair from acute indigestion. Bird made an occasion of the incident, speeding messengers for glasses of water, telephoning to doctors, summoning a luxurious private ambulance, dispatching a warning message to Mrs. Smith, doing everything spectacular and efficient he could think of. Next day John Smith insisted on returning to work against the doctor's advice. He caught a chill and developed a heavy cold from overexertion and was sent home in the ambulance, swearing like a pirate at Amos Bird.

Three specialists, much more noted and expensive than the first, were summoned discoveries were made in the Chauteau De la Suze, and in every other place where he had made his abode. Murder accompanied him wherever he went. The number of children slaughtered by this fiend of extermination is estimated at 140.

"How slaughtered and why? In the answer to this question lay something more horrible than death itself. They were offerings to the devil. He invoked the fiends Barron, Orient, Beelzebub, Satan and Belial, praying them to grant him 'gold, knowledge and power.' In his blood mania, he had killed these innocent victims, seeking what the vivisectors of today are seeking—the secrets of nature, for the fame they might bring him.

"He was animated by a perversion of a type well known to modern, psychiatrists, who similarly account for the lust of human and animal experimenters of the present day.

Human Vivisection

SCARCELY a week passes without my hearing the pitiful story of some unnecessary surgical operation, leaving the victim—if the operation is not fatal—with chronic physical or mental ills, or both. Our hospitals have become largely institutions for medical research. Nor does this refer only to county and charity hospitals.

In England, the people are beginning to demand laws to control and restrict this constantly increasing medical butchery. As recognized at a recent meeting of the American Medical Association, it is largely stimulated by the disreputable practice of fee splitting between "good, old family doctors," and high-priced surgical experts.

Occasionally an operation is necessary, but such cases are only a small precentage of the opgrations performed.

Cooking

NEARLY three hundred years ago John Taylor wrote, "God sends meat and the Devil sends cooks," an epigram that was stolen a century later by David Garrick. There is more than a little truth in the saying, for cooking food is to a great extent spoiling food.

Many think we could not possibly do without cooking. There are, however, in the world, millions of healthy people who rarely taste cooked food.

A Chicago technical high school teacher recently asserted that the American girl is the poorest cook in the world, and that her heavy biscuits drive many men to drink. The first part of the statement may be somewhat exaggerated, although the American girl is certainly not the best cook in the world. That bad cooking is a prolific cause of drinking, ill temper, all kinds of uncharitableness, and not infrequently of crime, is an absolute fact. A man with a fatal disease is sometimes angelic in disposition, but your confirmed dyspeptic is almost always a nuisance to himself, and to all around him. Bad cooking breeds dyspepsia.

Of late, there has been an encouraging disposition to teach girls how to cook. It is much more important than some of the "accomplishments" they now learn. If all girls could cook well there would be fewer divorces.

The chief drawback to ordinary cooking is the fact that the all-important organic salts are thereby largely changed into the inorganic form, in which form they cannot be utilized, or are removed, as when, in cooking vegetables, the water is discarded, and in the bolting of flour. Cooking also leads people to eat two or three times as much as they should, first, because the food is soft and easily gulped down, and second, because the absence or deficiency of the mineral elements leads people instinctively to eat more, in order to feed their starved nerves.

The labor-saving frying pan is the cause of much dyspepsia, especially when animal grease is used. The frying pan and patent medicine bottles are twin brothers. Even when vegetable oil is used, frying is not wholesome. Baking is the best form of cooking—and produces the most savory food. The secret of the barbecue of the Spanish-Americans, and of French cookery, is that the essence or spirit of the food is retained in closed vessels. Otherwise, food should be steamed, or broiled.

During the past few years a raw food diet has been taken up by some people, the diet often consisting largely of raw cereals, a food that should be used only with great moderation, and should be avoided entirely by those with weak stomachs. Cereals should be dextrinized, by baking or parching. The natural raw foods are fruits and nuts, leaves, stalks and green corn.

Cigarettes

CIGARETTE smoking is especially harmful to growing children. It stunts them physically, mentally and morally.

Ernest Crutcher, M. D., writes:

"Tobacco has an especially harmful effect on the young by its influence on the chain of ductless glands in general, particularly the thymus, thyroid and pituitary. The pituitary has much to do with development of the intellectual powers. The mental faculties fail to respond when tobacco is used by the immature. It is the cigarette smoker who flunks out of school and college.

"It might not be necessary to be so pronouncedly against cigarettes and tobacco, nor make this appeal to thinkers, but for the extraordinary advertising campaign inaugurated by tobacco manufacturers who seem disdainful of the future citizenry of our country. 'For of this sort are they which enter into houses and lead silly women captive.'

"If a boy wishes to be strong and manly, he must avoid cigarettes and tobacco. If a girl—but there, a clean-minded, nice girl does not wish to use cigarettes. If she rightly values her feminity and appreciates her importance as a future mother, she will never touch a cigarette.

"If the simple-minded females who use them knew the pernicious effects on their ductless glands, the organs that build and preserve the skin, brightness of hair and eyes, rotundity of bosom and form, they would never be beguiled into using cigarettes.

"The debauchery of our girls and young womanhood—she who is to mother the coming race; she who is guardian of all that the race has gathered in virility, physique and morale through ages gone—is a crime against all posterity! Woman is the treasurer of the heritage of mankind; the thesaurus of all that has been won through enduring time. The use of tobacco and cigarettes in a potential mother is beyond characterization; it is as evil as drugs that might impair her fertility and maternal possibilities. It is a fact, undeniable by scientific men, that tobacco in any form is hurtful to a woman, particularly if used by a young girl or immature woman.

"I write as a friend of mankind. It is not prejudice, but a yearning to serve my fellows. Tobacco is a drug, and no less harmful to the adolescent boy or young woman than morphine, cocaine or other drug habit.

"The use of tobacco provokes a wish for stronger narcotic by the screaming nerves, and in endeavor to quiet them, liquor or drug is resorted to by many victims.

"Many antiprohibitionists declare the increased use of drugs in the United States to be due to lack of liquor. This is untrue. Drugs are narcotic; liquor is stimulant. It is the urge of nerves provoked by tobacco

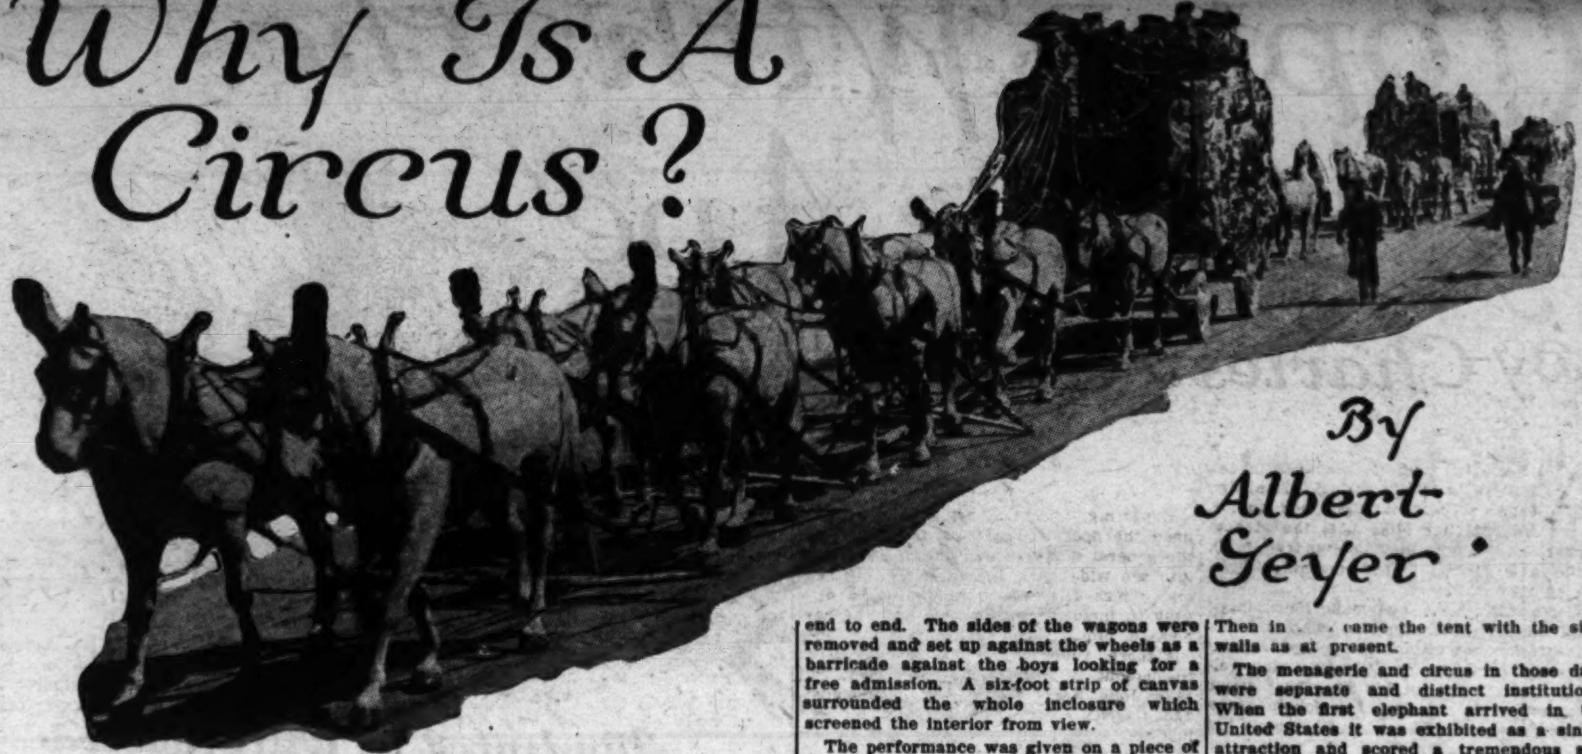
Why Is A Circus?



By Albert Geyer

PART I

CHARIOT races and bloody human combats between gladiators and other fights between men and ferocious wild beasts from the jungle, were immensely popular during the rise, supremacy and decadent periods of Imperial Rome, and these were staged in amphitheaters called "The Circus." It doesn't take a student of history to understand that the circus of classical Rome differed radically from the modern amusement institution we know as "The Circus" and was in no sense its progenitor although it bequeathed its name to the language of today.

The circus as we know it is comparatively speaking, but of recent origin. Some stunts however that have from time immemorial been included in its repertoire, were performed publicly long before the circus existed as an organization. An early Byzantine historian mentions a troupe of nomadic professional rope walkers and horsemen who came to Constantinople from the East in the thirteenth century and gave public exhibitions. These aerialists stretched their ropes from the mast of one ship to that of another, and the equestrians executed a variety of hair-raising feats.

The real forerunners of the circus, however, were the small troupes and families of strolling athletes that some 200 years ago toured England and the continent of Europe. They traveled and slept in one large van; carried trumpets and drums; and when they came to a small town they drew a crowd with their loud noises, performed their tricks in the center of a ring of people, took up a collection—and moved on.

One of these roving English showmen, Philip Astley, was an equestrian of very unusual ability and in 1768 he exhibited his skill and prowess in an unsheltered ring in London which was merely enclosed by a rope and stakes. Two fifers, augmented by Astley's wife who beat a bass-drum, constituted the musical accompaniment. At the conclusion of each performance a hat was passed among the spectators who threw into it such sums of money as represented their delight with the show or their state of opulence.

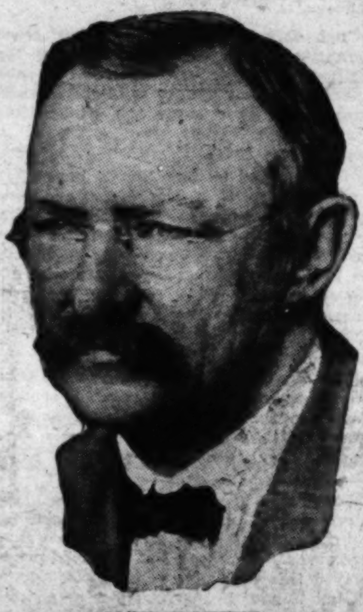
The pronounced financial success that attended Astley's venture caused him later to erect a wooden structure upon the site and a regular admittance fee was charged—seats a shilling, standing places, sixpence. Shows were then given at night instead of day. Hundreds of noxious, smoking and smudging tallow candles comprised the illumination. Assistants were engaged and the augmented company later embraced equestrians, tumblers, contortionists, jugglers, equilibrists, wire-walkers, trapeze artists, etc. A pantomime clown was next added and eventually human freaks and other curiosities.

Trained beasts first became identified with the circus when in 1802 an itinerant Englishman named Woods procured an educated bear, a performing goat and several other trained domestic animals. He was the nabob showman of his day. His circus was such a mammoth institution that it required five vehicles to transport it from place to place! This "Stupendous Aggregation of Consolidated Marvels," as his advertisements proclaimed, was then "The Earth's Largest Show," which in some form has been with us ever since. The menagerie, which now is an inseparable and important part of every circus, had its genesis in England in 1806 when the first elephant was shown in a startling circus.

1812—Circus and War

THE first circus to exhibit in America came from England in 1812. The show in its entirety consisted of seven wagons, and when a performance was given, these vehicles were all placed in a semi-circle, end to end. The sides of the wagons were removed and set up against the wheels as a barricade against the boys looking for a free admission. A six-foot strip of canvas surrounded the whole inclosure which screened the interior from view.

The performance was given on a piece of carpet spread on the ground in the center of the arena. The interior was open to the sky and when the Yankee boys climbed trees in order to witness the show gratis, the management canopied this top opening by stretching canvas across it, whose edges were fastened to the wagons. A few years later some ingenious Yankee invented a center pole that raised the middle of the canvas far above the heads of the audience.



ALBERT GEYER

"Champion tumbler of the world" during the earlier days of the circus in America; now a circus fan.

Then in . . came the tent with the side-walls as at present.

The menagerie and circus in those days were separate and distinct institutions. When the first elephant arrived in the United States it was exhibited as a single attraction and scored a tremendous success. As circuses multiplied and competition between them grew keen, the menagerie and circus combined. The first consolidation took place in 1851 when the menagerie was placed in a separate adjoining tent.

Modern advertising and publicity got its first big boost through the success of the highly colored posters and window sheets of the earlier circuses, and the snappy publicity with which the shows were heralded. It has improved along with other advertising, but it surely opened the eyes of the commercial world to what advertising could accomplish under expert guidance and persistent application.

As a rule, these tented concerns, that arose at dawn and flitted away at night, began their annual trek through the country about the middle of April and ended their tours the latter part of October. While in winter quarters, new advertising matter was designed, the paraphernalia was renovated, trained animals taught novel tricks, untrained animals were "broke," new wardrobes were substituted for the old and—what was regarded as of paramount importance—a new tentative route for the ensuing season had to be painstakingly mapped out.

The territory they proposed visiting was carefully scoured for information regarding local conditions. They fully informed themselves relative to the financial status of the communities in the sections of country through which they intended to pass; how far the larger towns were apart; when crops were being harvested, etc.

If after the itinerary had been arranged, something of a calamitous nature occurred that seriously impaired the prosperity of slowness with which the air is expelled, until gradually the count may be increased to ten or fifteen. While, as we have said, breathing may be thoroughly unconscious in ordinary speaking, there are some qualities, not the least of which is resonance (that quality which sustains tone,) that cannot be acquired without proper breath control. To be assured that resonance and carrying power are accomplished by control of respiration, one need only notice the singer who has developed vocal ability or the actress who has acquired mastery of speech. What do they do?

They breathe deeply, thus securing the proper voice support.

"The faculty of taking pains and a little practice with the child every day will work wonders toward acquiring a beautiful speaking voice which will soon become a habit. Let us not hesitate to take these pains, remembering always that we cannot, like a dress to be put on in the evening, have two kinds of speech, but that the child's everyday habits will mark the adult speech habits and that beautiful speech is a mark of true culture."

To this I add that, in order to have "good teeth and nasal cavities free from obstruction" a child must be fed properly.

Sunday Laws

FROM time to time attempts are made to enforce Sunday laws in California, about the only State still free from such sumptuary legislation. These efforts should be strongly opposed and repressed, for Sunday laws are illogical, are unjust, and infringe on the liberties of the people.

Such attempts always originate with those who take the Bible as a guide. Yet, in the whole Bible, from Genesis to Revelations, there is not a single passage commanding or authorizing the keeping holy of the first day of the week. It was the Emperor Constantine, a sort of hermaphrodite Christian, who, in 321 A. D., enacted a law that "all courts of justice, inhabitants and towns and work-shops are to be at rest on Sunday," with the exception in favor of those engaged in agricultural labor.

These Sunday laws are unjust to our Jewish fellow-citizens, of whom there are millions, and to the Seventh Day Adventists, of whom there are hundreds of thousands, as well as to the large number of people who do not believe in keeping any day of the week as a holy day.

If Sabbatarians complied with the law of Moses they would not travel over three miles on what they call the "Sabbath," or light a fire on that day.

The Catholic and Lutheran churches are more liberal in this respect than are these narrow-minded sectarians. In Europe you may see the priest, Catholic or Lutheran, after celebrating mass in the morning, umpiring a ball game on the village green, and later smoking a pipe and drinking a stein of beer at the inn with the village officials.

These cold-blooded reformers, who seem to believe that anything pleasing is wicked, remind one of what Macaulay said about the Puritans: "They objected to bear baiting, not because it gave pain to the bear, but because it gave pleasure to the spectators."

Doctoring Foods

A FEW years ago experiments were under way at the Agricultural Bacteriological Station in Vienna to increase the quantity of iron carried in certain plants, with a view to the effect on the human system when those plants are used as food. The investigators told us that "artificially prepared foods containing iron do not always produce the desired effect, because the iron is not completely assimilated."

How slow the "regulars" are in learning simple facts about foods. I have been preaching for a quarter of a century, and German hygienists for more than twice that period, that minerals in the inorganic form are either inert, or become active poisons, when introduced in the human system, and are promptly cast forth, the casting forth process being sometimes regarded as a "cure." This, of course, knocks the entire mineral drug theory "galley west and crooked."

The report from Vienna went on to say that by adding hydrate of iron to the soil the experimenters have succeeded in producing spinach containing seven times as much iron as usual. Here is another example of medical foolishness. Why always try to improve on nature? Spinach already contains more mineral than any other common food. To put yet more into it would be to make it unwholesome.

Again, why always harp so much on iron? That seems to be as far as the medical men ever get, in sizing up the mineral contents of food. There are eleven other mineral elements in the body and in natural foods.

Human Vivisection

THE taste for vivisection grows, and it is not confined to animals.

There are many examples of this in history. Following is from the Open Door:

"In the saddest period of French history, the Fifteenth Century, the atrocious crimes of the feudal barons shocked all nations of Europe. Foremost among these monsters was the original of Bluebeard, Gilles De Retz. Such was the terror inspired by that name, say the ancient historians that it had silenced every tongue for fouteen years.

"It is this same De Retz who is now regarded as a progenitor of the vivisectors, a founder of the human 'experimentation,' that has become the curse of modern civilization.

"The grandees and the princes of those days had acquired a strange appetite for blood during the years of hideous wars in which they were engaged. They were ferocious leaders of houspilleurs, tondeurs, ecorcheurs, ruining the ruined, taking away the shirt from him who had been left with nothing but a shirt to cover him; and if nothing remained but the skin, then stripping off the skin.

"People were well inured to these things, but one such that came to light stupefied all men with wonder and horror. A great lord in the neighborhood of Nantes was regarded with singular awe. He was a Retz, of the house of Laval, which was itself a branch of the Montforts, of the lineage of the dukes of Brittany.

"An old woman called La Meffraie used to travel about the country andthe heaths and make up to the children who kept cattle or begged. Caressing and cajoling them, but all the while keeping her face half covered with a piece of black gauze, she used to entice them to the chateau of the Sire De Retz, and they were never seen again.

"When the Bishop of Nantes proceeded against Gilles De Retz, there was found in the tower of Chantoce a tunful of calcined children's bones, the remains, it was calculated, of some forty victims. Similar

Borneo's Fierce Orang-Utans in Captivity and in the Wilds—The Call of the Painted Forest in the Theater—Fate of Trustful Natives on the White Man's Tragic Business

[NOTE: After recounting some of his exciting and tragic memories of the circus last week, Mr. Mayer now returns to his experiences in the capture and transporting of wild beasts from the jungles of the Malay Peninsula, Sumatra and Borneo. He has been no less than eighteen years at this adventurous calling, and few men, either East or West, are as noted in this same field as he.

This is the seventh installment of the present series by Mr. Mayer. The eighth article, "The Pursuit of the Mad Elephant," will appear next week.—Editor.]

ODDLY enough, three out of the four letters left me one morning by the Eurasian postman in Singapore contained orders for good-sized orang-utans. America, Holland and Australia all wanted orangs.

Now orang-utans are found in but two places in the world, Borneo and Sumatra, both islands, and only in limited portions of these. So my morning's mail looked to me like the hand of fate pointing to Dutch Borneo.

I looked up steamers and called my Chinese "boy," Hsi Chu I. "Chu," I said, "you and I shall sail for Pontianak in three days. I am going to get some full-grown orangs."

I had learned to read Hsi Chu I's placid face. It was depressed. His eyes dropped to my right leg, which I had almost lost five years before when a big orang grabbed my ankle. "Bad luck, tuan," he murmured.

I laughed and quoted a Malay proverb which runs, "That which brought bad luck yesterday may tomorrow hold gold in its hand."

Hsi Chu I did not look convinced, but he salaamed and went about getting my things ready for our four-and-a-half day's voyage.

Twelve Days Inland

ON LANDING at Pontianak I called at the Dutch Residency, to give an account of myself and to get official permission to go inland. Then I went to the hotel, where I had a little stone room, with my own bath and my own private veranda. In batik pajamas I lay there, stretched out comfortably in a long chair, and interviewed natives and gave them instructions about preparing for my trip.

I had long talks with Mahommed Tye, an animal-dealer whom I knew well. He made all the arrangements for me and sent a boat ahead on the twelve-day journey upstream, to prepare my old friend, Mahommed Munshee, for my coming. Munshee was the headman of a kampong. Still higher up the river there was another old friend, Omar, also a headman, whose village I was going to make a base of operations for the orang hunt proper.

On the evening of the twelfth day I could see in the distance the kampong of Mahommed Munshee. I got out my pistol and fired it into the air. My host, I am sure, was watching for me, because, while the barrel was still smoking, a rude log canoe put out. The men in it shouted, dug their pointed paddles into the water and pushed as if to shove the stream from under them.

In a few moments they were beside us and not only Munshee but Omar stood up in the dug-out log, seized hold of the thatched roof over my head and sprang in under it. They caught my hand in turn, pressed it to their brows and grinned like delighted boys. Their greeting brought a lump into my throat.

I was pleased to find that a house had been built for me. It consisted of one bamboo room, on piles, with a roof of palm-leaves. Luckily no terrible heathen rites were connected with house-building in this part of Borneo. In any case it would not have seemed necessary to guard me from demons, since I was reputed to be a witch-doctor.

Five years before I had dynamited the river; stunned fish by the hundred had been gathered in and cured and even a crocodile, shocked by the explosion, had floated belly upward on the stream. Devils could have no power over the dwelling of such a white man.

The people begged me to perform the miracle again. I had come prepared for this request and once more there was a fish harvest. I always felt ashamed when I played this unsportsmanlike trick on the fish, but it had the useful effect of making natives look at me with an awe almost like worship.

I had Munshee announce, as interpreter, that after dark I would have something to show the whole kampong. "Tell the women," I said, "not to let the children go to sleep until all have seen and heard." I did this not only because I wanted to give the little boys and girls pleasure, but because I had no idea of having them wakened in terror out of their first sleep.

When the sudden tropical darkness fell, Chu brought me out a package, his face as solemn as a Chinese god's. In it were the makings of a Fourth of July celebration.

The Solemn Chant

AS I ARRANGED the inhabitants of the kampong (I should say there were a hundred and fifty of them) in a wide circle, I gave them a lesson in gallantry. I had the children squat in an inner ring; I directed the women to kneel behind them and told the men to stand still farther back.

With Chu as my assistant, I made little mounds of the stuff which turns, when lighted, into colored fires. I placed the mounds in a sort of design and trained a line of black powder to each from the spot where I stood. I thought it best, when all this was finished, to have some kind of ceremony; so I waved my arms and chanted:

> "Old Mother Hubbard,
> She went to the cupboard,
> To get her poor dog a-b-o-n-e."

Next I touched a match to the spot where the lines of powder met. Ribbons of white flame ran along the ground; suddenly the whole place was red, then red and green.

A Question Propounded

THERE was a dead silence. A woman's shriek broke the spell, and then there was one scream after another. The children butted through the crowd and their mothers followed. They hid behind trees or ran to the bottom of the ladders that led to their houses.

None of the men ran. It would have taken a brave man to run. Dyaks hate cowards. They laughed to show their courage or perhaps to hide their fear. One wrinkled fellow, the great-grandfather of the village, threw back his head and gave the old Dyak war-cry. It was very strange. It began low, swelled, then died down and swelled again.

After that I produced the climax of my performance: Chinese firecrackers plaited in a string two yards long. I lighted the end of the fuse and they popped and burst in twos and threes. My audience went wild. The young men began to leap into the air, as if in half-crazy play, and they kept it up until the last cracker had exploded.

When all was quiet, I motioned to the crowd to gather round me and I called on Munshee to interpret. I asked him to tell them that I had come especially for orang-utans and that I wanted them alive.

After a deal of jabber on both sides Munshee said to me: "I have told them, tuan, and they will be to you like the fingers on your own hands. But they say these wild beasts are ugly, they have empty stomachs that cry for food and, being fed, they will do no work. They ask why the tuan would carry beasts away with him and feed them in idleness as a raja feeds a woman of great beauty."

After a moment's thought I said, "In far countries it is good for the eyes of men, women and children to look upon beasts of the jungle."

He salaamed. "I will tell them, tuan, that in your country beast-gazing is good eye-medicine."

They were won by that answer and twenty of them responded to Munshee's gether, even from the standpoint of health, is no longer doubted. For not only may a voice have a good or bad reflex action upon its possessor, but by the correct use of voice, tuberculosis, in many persons with that tendency, could be successfully warded off.

"It is plain that childhood is the time when the foundation is laid for the acquisition of correct speech and a pleasing speaking voice. Even a baby will listen intently and turn instantly at the sound of an unusual voice. The Hawaiian children learn to sing as readily as they learn to talk merely by listening to their parents singing all day at their work. Parents may, by means of a little care and the application of a few principles, do more and with far better results than it is possible for a teacher to accomplish at a later date. The great aim should be not to allow the high-pitched tone, nasal twang, whine or other imperfections to fix themselves in childhood, for their growth is so subtle and so deep that the work of correction in later life is apt to be slow and arduous.

"Many defects and anomalies are acquired chiefly by imitation. In lisping the influence of imitation is generally admitted to be very important. Recently a physician reported having observed this speech defect in five children in one family. It had been acquired from a lisping maid. The unconscious observation of a child is very keen, so if those who surround him have linguistic defects, he may develop similar ones. In a very young child a defect of speech may appear to be attractive, but if allowed to continue it can be overcome only with great difficulty, if at all. And now where is the beginning?

"First, the parents must establish an ideal, realizing that speech as well as silence can be made golden. That is, they must know what constitutes a beautiful mode of speaking; they must learn to distinguish good sounds in speech from bad sounds and accustom their children to hearing good speaking voices. Close attention to the language of others who speak better than we do will help immensely in cultivating the ear to the appreciation of vocal charm. By studying the voice that pleases and endeavoring to imitate it, much may be accomplished, since the imitative power of the vocal cords is unlimited. While at first, when trying to acquire a quality that pleases, a conscious effort is required, this soon falls into the realm of the unconscious. In other words, what was at first a conscious effort soon becomes a habit.

"In what does a beautiful mode of speaking consist? The quality which we would place at the top is modulation—a voice always under control, one so disciplined as never to be irritating to the nerves or to the ear of good taste. With this there should be a natural, easy utterance, clear and distinct, carrying a full and vital expression, and having rather than a wide range of sound, beauty of tone. These are the essential qualities that make for good speaking. While they cannot all be acquired at once, parents should have them fixed in mind as a goal to be reached by their children.

"And now having established an ideal of good speech, how shall we begin to work toward it?

"There are three physical essentials for the cultivation of a pleasing speaking voice: Good teeth; a non-constricted, clear and open throat; nasal cavities free from obstruction.

"The child's teeth should always have the best of care, for, by their neglect and subsequent deformity, the utterance may be spoiled.

"The muscles of the throat should be allowed freedom of action; that is, they should not be constricted by high or tight collars, and there should be no obstruction such as excessively enlarged tonsils would cause.

"In perfect speech the principal sounds issue from the mouth, but they must be strengthened, by the resonance of the nasal cavities. This resonance cannot be properly given if in the nasal passages there is any interference such as adenoid growths or spurs of bone. Always, too, the general health must be taken into consideration. For whatever pertains to physical health immediately affects the voice. With the bodily health at low ebb, it is simply impossible to have a clear and sustained tone. This is also true where the posture is poor and the breathing incorrect. And now as to fundamental training?

"First, we believe that parents should recognize and endeavor to eradicate in [illegible] to whine or the tone pitched too high, just as quickly as they correct faulty pronunciation or grammatical construction. For it should be remembered always that the habits of speech which the child is acquiring will be the vocal habits of the adult.

"In a general way the study of voice culture is divided into two parts—correct breathing and articulation and pronunciation. If given half a chance, that is, if the child is taught to stand and sit erect, nature will attend to the breath supply so far as ordinary speaking is concerned. If, however, the child's voice is thin, feeble or shrill, it means incorrect breathing. To correct this, teach the child to breath deeply, that is, to breath from the diaphragm (the muscle between the chest and abdomen.) This means breathing from the bottom of the chest instead of from the top. While one breathes without being consciously aware of it, the art of deep breathing has to be acquired by practice. When practicing deep breathing have the child stand in a well-poised position:

"The feet should be slightly apart, toes pointing straight ahead, weight equally distributed between the feet. The hips should be straight, stomach drawn in, not evidencing effort but showing the result of correct hip and chest posture. The chest should be held high with the chin lifted but not tilted. The shoulders should be dropped downward, not forced back, as they will be back if the chest is high. In this position tell the child to fill the lungs (to inhale) and to try before expiration to make a slow mental count of five, exhaling sometimes explosively and sometimes slowly and steadily. If this is done regularly for a few minutes each day, little by little the lungs will dilate and one will unconsciously increase the length of the inspirations and the

Feet That "Pick Themselves Up"

How often you have heard the expression "too tired to drag my feet along!" Perhaps you, too, have felt as though your energy were insufficient to meet the demands of active days.

This condition may generally be traced to improper foot wear! If your feet are shod with ordinary shoes—made, as they are, with rigid arches and unnatural lines—you, too, have had to "drag your feet along." In such shoes the muscles of the foot are generally restricted to such an extent that circulation throughout the entire body may be impaired. This causes mental as well as physical fatigue. But in the the arches are flexible. They give your feet a chance to build up muscular strength—and allow free circulation. The foot is held in a properly arched position so that even though weak it can perform its function of supporting the body weight.

Cantilever Shoes are made of lightweight, high-grade leathers, and are reasonably priced. They have moderate heels—and nicely rounded toes. They are made in a number of attractive styles. A salesman at our store will fit your feet perfectly in good looking, health-building Cantilevers, that will cause your feet to "pick themselves up" and carry you comfortably along the Road of Happy Feet.

Lawyer Quince

By W. W. Jacobs

LAWYER QUINCE, so-called by his neighbors in Little Haven from his readiness at all times to place at disposal the legal lore he had acquired from a few old books while following his useful occupation of making boots, sat in a kind of wooden hutch at the side of his cottage plying his trade. The London coach had gone by in a cloud of dust some three hours before, and since then the wide village street had slumbered almost undisturbed in the sunshine.

Hearing footsteps and the sound of voices raised in dispute caused him to look up from his work. Mr. Rose of Holly Farm, Hogg, the miller, and one or two neighbors of lesser degree appeared to be in earnest debate over some point of unusual difficulty.

Lawyer Quince took a pinch of snuff and bent to his work again. Mr. Rose was one of the very few who openly questioned his legal knowledge, and his gibes concerning it were only too frequent. Moreover, he had a taste for practical joking, which to a grave man was sometimes offensive.

"Well, here he be," said Mr. Hogg to the farmer, as the group halted in front of the hutch. "Now ask Lawyer Quince and see whether I ain't told you true. I'm willing to abide by what he says."

Mr. Quince put down his hammer and, brushing a little snuff from his coat, leaned back in his chair and eyed them with grave confidence.

"It's like this," said the farmer. "Young Pascoe has been hanging around after my girl Celia, though I told her she wasn't to have nothing to do with him. Half an hour ago I was going to put my pony in its stable when I see a young man sitting there waiting."

"Well?" said Mr. Quince, after a pause.

"He's there yet," said the farmer. "I locked him in, and Hogg here says that I've got the right to keep him locked up there as long as I like. I say it's agin the law, but Hogg he says no. I say his folks would come and try to break open my stable, but Hogg says if they do I can have the law of 'em for damaging my property."

"So you can," interposed Mr. Hogg, firmly. "You see whether Lawyer Quince don't say I'm right."

Mr. Quince frowned, and in order to think more deeply closed his eyes. Taking advantage of this three of his auditors, with remarkable unanimity, each closed one.

"It's your stable," said Mr. Quince, opening his eyes and speaking with great deliberation, "and you have a right to lock it up when you like."

"There you are," said Mr. Hogg: "what did I tell you?"

"If anybody's there that's got no business there, that's his lookout," continued Mr. Quince. "You didn't induce him to go in?"

"Certainly not," replied the farmer.

"I told him he can keep him there as long as he likes," said the jubilant Mr. Hogg, "and pass him in bread and water through the winder; it's got bars to it."

"Yes," said Mr. Quince, nodding, "he can do that. As for his folks knocking the place about, if you like to tie up one or two of the nasty, savage dogs of yours to the stable, well, it's your stable, and you can fasten your dogs to it if you like. And you've generally got a man about the yard."

Mr. Hogg smacked his thigh in ectasy.

"But—" began the farmer.

"That's the law," said the autocratic Mr. Quince, sharply. "O' course, if you think you know more about it than I do I've nothing more to say."

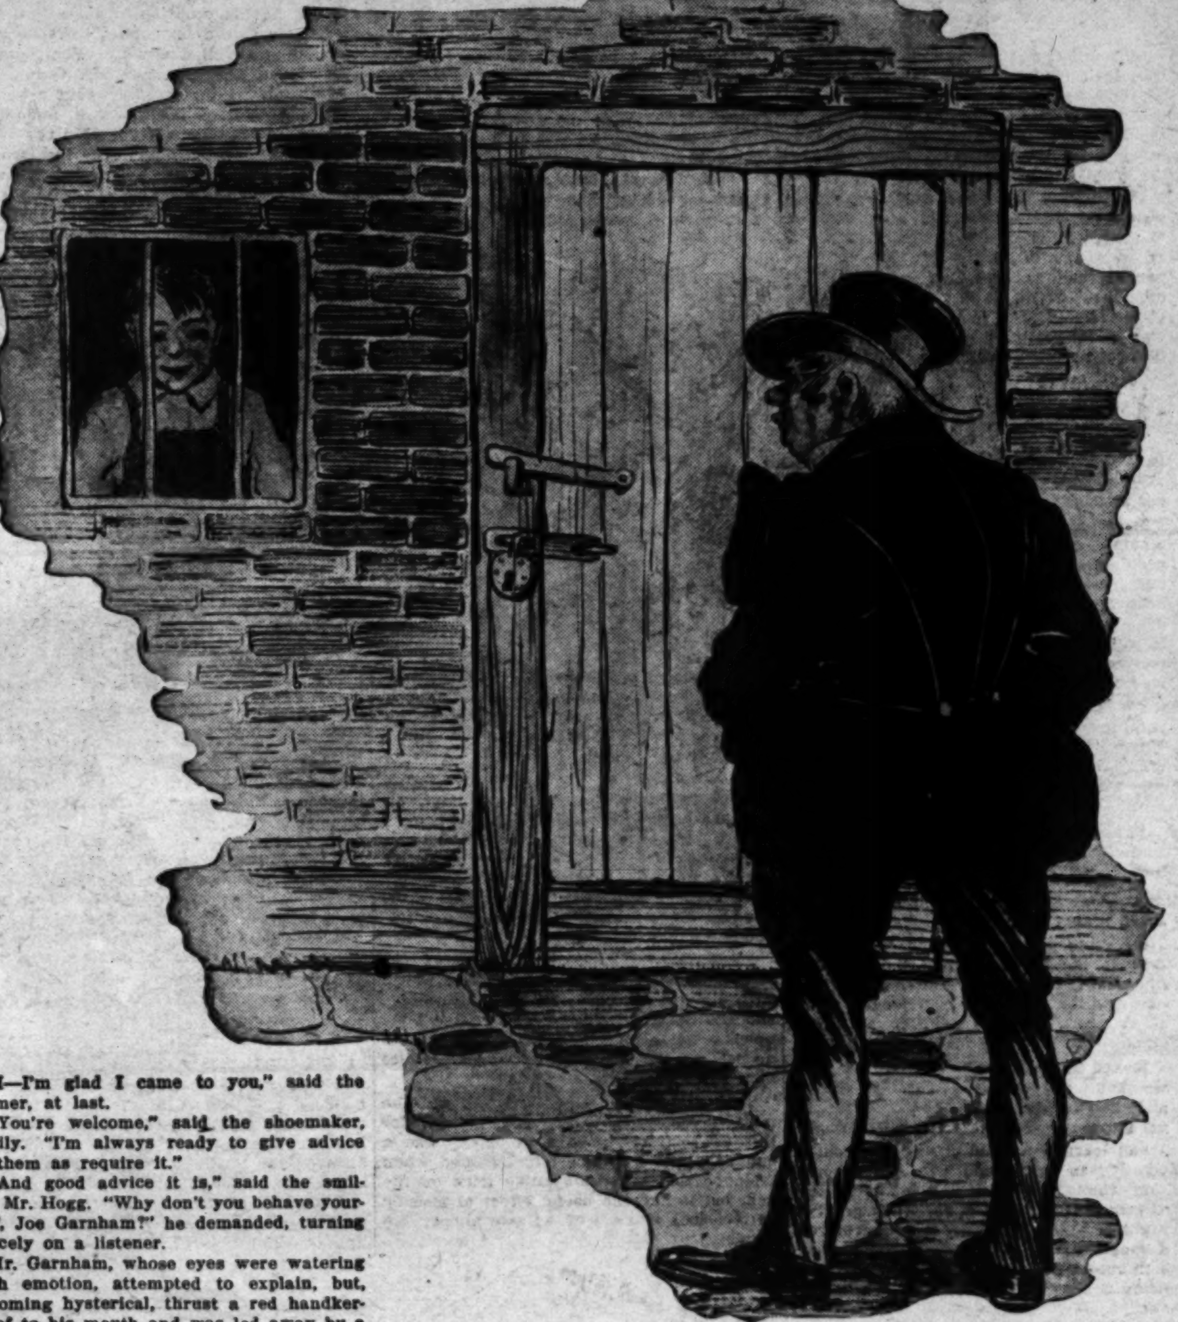
"I don't want to do nothing I could get into trouble for," murmured Mr. Rose.

"You can't get into trouble by doing as I tell you," said the shoemaker, impatiently. "However, to be quite on the safe side, if I was in your place I should lose the key."

"Lose the key?" said the farmer, blankly.

"Lose the key," repeated the shoemaker, his eyes watering with intense appreciation of his own resourcefulness. "You can find it any time you want to, you know. Keep him there till he promises to give up your daughter and tell him that as soon as he does you'll have a hunt for the key."

Mr. Rose regarded him with what the shoemaker easily understood to be speechless admiration.



"None of yer impudence," said the farmer.

"I—I'm glad I came to you," said the farmer, at last.

"You're welcome," said the shoemaker, loftily. "I'm always ready to give advice to them as require it."

"And good advice it is," said the smiling Mr. Hogg. "Why don't you behave yourself, Joe Garnham?" he demanded, turning fiercely on a listener.

Mr. Garnham, whose eyes were watering with emotion, attempted to explain, but, becoming hysterical, thrust a red handkerchief to his mouth and was led away by a friend. Mr. Quince regarded his departure with mild disdain.

"Little things please little minds," he remarked.

"So they do," said Mr. Hogg. "I never thought—What's the matter with you, George Askew?"

Mr. Askew, turning his back on him, threw up his hands with a helpless gesture and followed in the wake of Mr. Garnham. Mr. Hogg appeared to be about to apologize, and then suddenly altering his mind made a hasty and unceremonious exit, accompanied by the farmer.

Mr. Quince raised his eyebrows and then, after a long and meditative pinch of snuff, resumed his work. The sun went down and the light faded slowly: distant voices sounded close on the still evening air, snatches of hoarse laughter jarred upon his ears. It was clear that the story of the imprisoned swain was giving pleasure to Little Haven.

He rose at last from his chair and, stretching his long, gaunt frame, removed his leather apron, and after a wash at the pump went into the house. Supper was laid, and he gazed with approval on the home-made sausage rolls, the piece of cold pork, and the cheese which awaited his onslaught.

"We won't wait for Ned," said Mrs. Quince, as she brought in a jug of ale and placed it by her husband's elbow.

Mr. Quince nodded and filled his glass.

"You've been giving more advice, I hear," said Mrs. Quince.

Her husband, who was very busy, nodded again.

"It wouldn't make no difference to young Pascoe's chance, anyway," said Mrs. Quince, thoughtfully.

Mr. Quince continued his labors. "Why?" he inquired, at last.

His wife smiled and tossed her head.

"Young Pascoe's no chance against our Ned," she said, swelling with maternal pride.

"Eh?" said the shoemaker, laying down his knife and fork. "Our Ned?"

"They are as fond of each other as they can be," said Mrs. Quince, "though I don't suppose Farmer Rose'll care for it; not but what our Ned's as good as he is."

"Is Ned up there now?" demanded the shoemaker, turning pale, as the mirthful face of Mr. Garnham suddenly occured to him.

"Sure to be," tittered his wife. "And to think o' poor young Pascoe shut up in that stable while he's courting Celia!"

Mr. Quince took up his knife and fork again, but his appetite had gone. Whoever might be paying attention to Miss Rose at that moment he felt quite certain that it was not Mr. Ned Quince, and he trembled with anger as he saw the absurd situation into which the humorous Mr. Rose had led him. For years Little Haven had accepted his decisions as final and boasted of his sharpness to neighboring hamlets, and many a cottager had brought his boots to be mended a whole week before their time for the sake of an interview.

He moved his chair from the table and smoked a pipe. Then he rose, and putting a couple of formidable law books under his arm, walked slowly down the road in the direction of Holly Farm.

The road was very quiet and the White Swan, usually full at this hour, was almost deserted, but if any doubts as to the identity of the prisoner lingered in his mind they were speedily dissipated by the behavior of the few customers who crowded to the door to see him pass.

A hum of voices fell on his ear as he approached the farm: half the male and a goodly proportion of the female population of Little Haven were leaning against the fence or standing in little knots in the road, while a few of higher social status stood in the farm-yard itself.

"Come down to have a look at the prisoner?" inquired the farmer, who was standing surrounded by a little group of admirers.

"I came down to see you about that advice I gave you this afternoon," said Mr. Quince.

"Ah!" said the other.

"I was busy when you came," continued Mr. Quince, in a voice of easy unconcern, "and I gave you advice from memory. Look-not a physician, but a chemist, or rather an apothecary, attributed to the germs, these micro-organisms developed from the microzyma of Bechamp, the role of invaders, believing that because they were ever present in disease, certain germs being supposedly always present in certain diseases that therefore they cause these diseases.

"Bechamp was a scientist, Pasteur an advertiser. Bechamp was so absorbed in his researches that he contented himself with occasional reports to the Academy of Sciences, while Pasteur went to the public with everything he discovered, thus creating a popular following that acclaimed him a scientific genius.

"Much of his work, was plainly cribbed from Bechamp without credit, and interpreted to suit his purpose, which was to build up a huge market for germ destroyers.

"Bechamp died poor and unknown, outside the Academy; Pasteur in almost affluent circumstances, acclaimed by the scientific world as a great benefactor, and mourned yearly since his demise.

"This theory of germs as a cause of disease was analyzed by Prof. Robert Koch, who formulated a dictum, accepted by the scientists of his time, that must be met in order to fix on the germ as a cause of disease.

"According to this dictum if the germ caused the disease it must be present in every case of this disease; it must not be present except in conjunction with the disease; it must be susceptible of separate cultivation in proper media outside the body; and finally, it must be susceptible of transplantation again in the human body, where it must infallibly produce the same disease.

"The germ theory does not meet a single one of these conditions infallibly, the germ frequently being absent from diseased conditions which are attributed to it; being often generally present in bodies in which the disease generally attributed to it is most conspicuous by its absence; and while germs are susceptible to cultivation outside the body, in suitable media, yet they are subject to mutation as this medium is changed in character, and if again introduced into the body they do not always, infallibly, cause the disease they are supposed to cause, generally not causing disease of any kind whatsoever.

"Pasteur has generally set us back over sixty years by his advertisement of the germ theory, and if we go back to the teachings of Bechamp, recognizing the microzyma as the prime cause, and the germ as a development of an economic nature, result of the condition of the body, transformed into a necessary scavenger to remove from the body objectionable matter, we will perhaps regain the ground lost for over sixty years, and be able to concentrate our attention on the soil conditions in the body, not on the harmless germ scavenger.

"If the bacillus of tuberculosis was the cause of tuberculosis how could any of us escape infection?

"The same is true of typhoid fever, pneumonia, any infectious disease, for the germs accompanying those diseases are ubiquitous.

"We are spending valuable time, oodles of money, splendid brain power, in studying the life history of germs, when they are but economic scavengers, friendly things whose function is the often urgent one of ridding the body on short notice of accumulations that have become intolerable, embarrassing to functions, so that we are thus missing the real object of our search for the cause of disease.

"The soil conditions that make necessary the presence of the germ are our real field of search, but we have lost sight of this field almost entirely in our frantic hunt for germs, and we can lay the blame for this wrong steer at the door of Louis Pasteur.

"We have no real proof of the boasted effectiveness of any form of antitoxin or vaccine or serum.

"After one is vaccinated or serumized, immunized, we have destroyed the only proof that counts, for we have no way of knowing whether or not the vaccinated or serumized person would have contracted disease in the absence of this so-called protection; not all do so.

"If such vaccinated or serumized person contracts the disease against which he is supposed to be protected it is pretty good evidence that such 'protection' is valueless, isn't it? Surely people do contract diseases against which they are supposed to be immunized, as we all know.

"Were not our boys in the army thoroughly 'protected?' They were physically fit on admission to the army, else they could not have got by the examining boards; they were thoroughly, very thoroughly, immunised against typhoid fever, meningitis, pneumonia, influensa, yet they died like flies, not on the firing line, but right here at home, in the concentration camps, where they were surrounded by the finest sanitary precautions that science could devise, and not only did they die, but they died of the very diseases against which they were supposed to have been rendered immune."

A Well Modulated Voice

FOLLOWING is from an article in the Dearborn Independent by Mary E. Bayley:

"All of us have at some time been delighted and charmed by a beautiful speaking voice; all of us have more often been repelled by a harsh, mechanical voice. How often one fails to make the desired impression, succeeding only in tiring the listener because of indistinct articulation or fatiguing resonance of the voice.

"The influence of the speaking voice in all the relations of life, business, social or domestic, cannot be estimated. It may have a calming or irritating influence. And in our daily concourse the ability to deliver words clearly, in a pleasing voice, inspires toward us not only a better understanding from others, but a better feeling. That a good voice is an economic asset business men thoroughly appreciate; many of them refuse today to employ those suffering from any defect of speech.

"That the voice should be cultivated collaterally with the culture of words, the spoken word and vocal tone growing up to-

Princess Pats

PROPER CARE OF THE FEET

From June 2nd to June 7th, inclusive, an interesting and instructive demonstration of the famous Princess Pat shoe will be given in the Walk-Over Windows at 618 South Broadway.

The demonstrator will show during that time the wonderful advantages of this scientifically constructed and beautifully styled Walk-Over Preventative shoe.

From time to time we have told you in these columns how the Princess Pat has been perfected through years of experimentation, research and the careful study of foot problems which beset modern busy women. We have tried to indicate how the foot is supported by specially constructed steel arches and extra long counters; how the narrow heel clings to and steadies the foot; how the straight inner line to the sole and the sweeping outside tread force the foot that has begun to function abnormally back into the perfect alignment of its natural position.

Now, we want to let you actually see how this is done and have made our plans for five days of free demonstration for your benefit.

Princess Pats — besides being a wonderful corrective and preventive shoe — is a perfect delight to the woman who loves smart footwear. It has been developed in remarkable diversity of styles and in every material used for smart wear — satins, suedes, patents and kid leathers. Your style and color is to be found among them.

The illustrations show a few of the newer models—shoes you will delight in wearing purely from a style point of view.

We urge the women of Los Angeles to attend our demonstration during Princess Pat Week and see these and other beautiful style developments for themselves. They will be delighted at how beautifully clad their feet may be in shoes that will also keep them normal, rested and strong. Let us tell you and show you all about Walk-Over's greatest achievement—the Princess Pat.

There also will be a window display of Prince Pat styles for men. As the Prince and Princess Pat have been designed and built along the same lines to meet the same problems for men and women, men will find this demonstration of interest and value. You are invited to attend.

Mr. Quince coughed several times . . . when the girl stirred and and muttered in her sleep.

ing up the subject after you'd gone I found that I was wrong."

"You don't say so?" said the farmer, uneasily. "If I've done wrong I'm only doing what you told me I could do."

"Mistakes will happen with the best of us," said the shoemaker, loudly, for the benefit of one or two murmurers. "I've known a man to marry a woman for her money before now and find out afterward that she hadn't got any."

One unit of the group detached itself and wandered listlessly toward the gate.

"Well, I hope I ain't done nothing wrong," said Mr. Rose, anxiously. "You gave me the advice; there's men here as can prove it. I don't want to do nothing agin the law. What had I better do?"

"Well, if I was you," said Mr. Quince, concealing his satisfaction with difficulty, "I should let him out at once and beg his pardon, and say you hope he'll do nothing about it. I'll put in a word for you if you like with old Pascoe."

Mr. Rose coughed and eyed him queerly.

"You're a Briton," he said, warmly. "I'll go and let him out at once."

He strode off to the stable, despite the protests of Mr. Hogg, and, standing by the door, appeared to be deep in thought; then he came back slowly, feeling in his pockets as he walked.

"William," he said, turning toward Mr. Hogg, "I s'pose you didn't happen to notice where I put that key?"

"That I didn't," said Mr. Hogg, his face clearing suddenly.

"I had it in my hand not half an hour ago," said the agitated Mr. Rose, thrusting ole hand into his trouser pocket and groping. "It can't be far."

Mr. Quince attempted to speak, and, failing, blew his nose violently.

"My memory ain't what it used to be," said the farmer. "Howsomever, I dare say it'll turn up in a day or two."

"You—you'd better force the door," suggested Mr. Quince, struggling to preserve an air of judicial calm.

"No, no," said Mr. Rose; "I ain't going to damage my property like that. I can lock my stable door and unlock it when I like; if people get in there as have no business there, it's their look out."

"That's law," said Mr. Hogg; "I'll eat my hat if it ain't."

"Do you mean to tell me you've really lost the key?" demanded Mr. Quince, eying the farmer sternly.

"Seems like it," said Mr. Rose. "However, he won't come to no hurt. I'll put in some bread and water for him, same as you advised me to."

Mr. Quince mastered his wrath by an effort, and with no sign of discomposure moved away without making any reference to the identity of the unfortunate in the stable.

"Good-night," said the farmer, "and thank you for coming and giving me the fresh advice. It ain't everybody that 'ud ha' taken the trouble. If I hadn't lost that key—"

The shoemaker scowled and with the two fat books under his arm passed the listening neighbors with the air of a thoughtful man out for an evening stroll. Once inside his house, however, his manner changed, the attitude of Mrs. Quince demanding, at any rate, a show of concern.

"It's no good talking," he said at last. "Ned shouldn't have gone there, and as for going to law about it, I shan't do any such thing; I shall just go on as usual, as if nothing had happened, and when Rose is tired of keeping him there he must let him out. I'll bide my time."

Mrs. Quince subsided into vague mutterings as to what she would do if she were a man, coupled with sundry aspersions upon the character, looks and family connections of Farmer Rose, which somewhat consoled her for being what she was.

"He has always made jokes about your advice," she said at length. "and now everybody'll think he's right. I shan't be able to look anybody in the face. I should have seen through it at once if it had been me. I'm going down to give him a bit of my mind."

"You stay where you are," said Mr. Quince, sharply, "and, mind, you are not to talk about it to anybody. Farmer Rose 'ud like nothing better than to see us upset about it. I ain't done with him yet. You wait."

Mrs. Quince, having no option, waited, but nothing happened. The following day found Ned Quince still a prisoner, and, considering the circumstances, remarkably cheerful. He declined pointblank to renounce his preposterous attentions, and said that, living on the premises, he felt half like a son-in-law already. He also complimented the farmer upon the quality of his bread.

The next morning found him still unsubdued, and, under interrogation from the farmer, he admitted that he liked it, and said that the feeling of being at home was growing upon him.

"If you're satisfied, I am," said Mr. Rose, grimly. "I'll keep you here till you promise; mind that."

"It's a nobleman's life," said Ned, peeping through the window, "and I'm beginning to like you as much as my real father."

"I don't want none o' yer impudence," said the farmer, reddening.

"You'll like me better when you've had me here a little longer," said Ned; "I shall grow on you. Why not be reasonable and make up your mind to it? Celia and I have."

"I'm going to send Celia away on Saturday," said Mr. Ross; "make yourself happy and comfortable in here till then. If you'd like another crust o' bread or an extra half pint o' water you've only got to mention it. When she's gone I'll have a hunt for that key, so as you can go back to your father and help him to understand his law books better."

He strode off with the air of a conqueror and having occasion to go to the village looked in at the shoemaker's window as he passed and smiled broadly. For years Little Haven had regarded Mr. Quince with awe, as being far too dangerous a man for the lay mind to tamper with, and at one stroke the farmer had revealed the hollowness of his pretensions. Only that morning the wife of a laborer had called and asked him to hurry the mending of a pair of boots. She was a voluble woman, and having overcome her preliminary nervousness more than hinted that if he gave less time to the law and more to his trade it would be better for himself and everybody else.

Miss Rose accepted her lot in a spirit of dutiful resignation and on Saturday morning after her father's admonition not to forget that the coach left the White Swan at 2 sharp set off to pay a few farewell visits. By half-past 12 she had finished, and Lawyer Quince becoming conscious of a shadow on his work looked up to see her standing before the window. He replied to a bewitching smile with a short nod and became intent upon his work again.

For a short time Celia lingered, then to his astonishment she opened the gate and walked past the side of the house into the garden. With growing astonishment he observed her enter his tool shed and close the door behind her.

For ten minutes he worked on and then, curiosity getting the better of him, he walked slowly to the tool shed and, opening the door a little way, peeped in. It was a small shed, crowded with agricultural implements. The floor was occupied by an upturned wheelbarrow, and sitting on the barrow, with her soft cheek leaning against the wall, sat Miss Rose fast asleep. Mr. Quince coughed several times, each cough being louder than the last, and then, treading softly, was about to return to the workshop when the girl stirred and muttered in her sleep. At first she was unintelligible then he distinctly caught the words "idiot" and "blockhead."

"She's dreaming of somebody," said Mr. Quince to himself with conviction. "Wonder who it is?"

"Can't see—a thing—under—his—nose," murmured the fair sleeper.

"Celia!" said Mr. Quince, sharply, "Celia!"

He took a hoe from the wall and prodded her gently with the handle. A singularly vicious expression marred the soft features, but that was all.

"Cel-ia!" said the shoemaker, who feared sunstroke.

"Fancy if he— had— a moment's common sense," murmured Celia, drowsily, "and locked—the door."

Lawyer Quince dropped the hoe with a clatter and stood regarding her openmouthed. He was a careful man with his property, and the stout door boasted a good lock. He sped to the house on tip-toe, and taking the key from its nail on the kitchen dresser returned to the shed, and after another puzzled glance at the sleeping girl locked her in.

For half an hour he sat in silent enjoyment of the situation—enjoyment which would have been increased if he could have seen Mr. Rose standing at the gate of Holly Farm, casting anxious glances up and down the road. Celia's luggage had gone down to the White Swan, and an excellent cold luncheon was awaiting her attention in the living-room.

Half-past 1 came and no Celia, and five minutes later two farm laborers and a boy lumbered off in different directions in search of the missing girl, with instructions that she was to go straight to the White Swan to meet the coach. The farmer himself walked down to the inn, turning over in his mind a heated lecture composed for the occasion, but the coach came and, after a cheerful bustle and the consumption of sundry mugs of beer, sped on its way again.

He returned home in silent consternation, seeking in vain for a satisfactory explanation of the mystery. For a robust young woman to disappear in broad daylight and leave no trace behind her was extraordinary. Then a sudden sinking sensation in the region of the waistcoat and an idea occured simultaneously.

He walked down to the village again, the idea growing steadily all the way. Lawyer Quince was hard at work, as usual as he passed. He went by the window three times and gazed wistfully at the cottage. Coming to the conclusion at last that two heads were better than one in such a business, he walked on to the mill and sought Mr. Hogg.

"That's what it is," said the miller, as he breathed his suspicions. "I thought all along Lawyer Quince would have the laugh of you. He's wonderful deep. Now, let's go to work cautious like. Try and look as if nothing had happened."

Mr. Rose tried.

"Try again," said the miller, with some severity. 'Get the red out o' your face and let your eyes go back and don't look as though you're going to bite somebody."

Mr. Rose swallowed an angry retort, and with an attempt at careless ease, sauntered up the road with the miller to the shoemaker's. Lawyer Quince was still busy and looked up inquiringly as they passed before him.

"I s'pose," said the diplomatic Mr. Hogg, who was well acquainted with his neighbor's tidy and methodical habits—"I s'pose ting out of business mercenary schemers, and the prosecution and persecution of worthy dealers, for the purpose of maintaining the power of one school of medicine. Hitherto, this has been too much the rule.

Some of the men thus made the target of medical venom and bigotry have been true friends of humanity, showing the road to health to many who had been abandoned as hopeless by the "regulars." To class those who practice chiropractic, a helpful method of spinal adjustment, or hydrotherapy, the water cure, a method indorsed by Hippocrates, the "Father of Medicine," or naturopathy, embracing all natural methods of aiding nature—to class these men with "medical fakers" and "magnetic healers" as was done by a local agent of the State Board of Medical Examiners, displays either gross ignorance or malice.

A local representative of the State Board of Health asked for testimony from those who had not been benefited or had been injured by drugless treatments. How would it be for him to invite testimony from the thousands who have been permanently injured, or from relatives of those who have been killed, by treatments of the drugging, serum-injecting, and carving school? The result would certainly be quite interesting.

"What is a 'quack?' Medically speaking a quack is everyone but us, the regular school of medicine. No one who is not a graduate of a modern medical school is free from the odium of quackery, from the regular, classical, orthodox standpoint. Isn't this true?

"Let us put the definition of 'quack' a little more broadly, not limiting it to outlawed cults. From the broader viewpoint a quack is anyone who pretends to be something which he is not, or one who is not able to do what he claims to do, especially if he takes money for this pretense.

"From this broader view how many of us are there who can escape the suspicion of quackery?

"If we should tell the absolute truth as we see it how often would we be compelled to say to a patient: 'I do not know what is the matter with you, and not knowing this, I am in no position to treat you intelligently?'

"If we were honest how many patients would we have? They would all leave us for the quacks, and we would be left holding the bag, as it were. We know this, and all unconsciously we are compelled to assume an air of wisdom and pronounce judgment on maladies for which we are consulted, well knowing that if the case escape us and go to someone else our opinion is in danger, for it is a well known fact that if a case is not perfectly plain (and most cases are not plain,) should such case go to a hundred different regular, well-informed physicians he would get nearly as many different diagnoses, the same number of different prognoses, and still more different plans of treatment.

"We know this, I say, and we unconsciously protect ourselves by assuring the patient positively that we understand his condition very well, in order to make sure of this unfailing confidence in our enlightened judgment.

"Are we quacks for this deception? How can we escape the imputation? Who is to blame for this position in which we find ourselves? Is it our fault, or that of human nature as expressed in the patient? No doubt both, for while we are to blame for allowing ourselves to be placed in the position of arbiters on disease, about which we do not know very much, yet so also is the public to blame for being so silly as to think that the mysterious thing we call disease can be reduced to exact formulae.

"The fathers of medicine made what they were pleased to call discoveries, which were generally discoveries that certain drugs produced certain symptoms if taken into the interior of the human, and with these discoveries they proposed to combat the symptoms of disease.

"This was originally a theory, always has been a theory, and in the very nature of things never can be anything but a theory, for the internal processes of the body in health or disease, are not and never will be fully understood, the vital processes not being subject to exact analysis; and while we may learn much of the internal chemistry of the body, and discover experimentally many things of interest in the functions of the various organs, yet we never can analyze the vital machinery in action, and the sooner we drop this pretense of exact knowledge the better it will be for our prestige.

"Fully a third of the population of the United States has ceased to depend on regular physicians for advice or treatment of their various diseases, perhaps because they are beginning dimly to realize through many disappointments the fallibility of classical medicine. Who can tell?

"A questionnaire issued to 7000 people recently disclosed the fact that less than 10 per cent of them were unqualifiedly loyal to medicine, more than 90 per cent admitting their allegiance, partially or wholly, to Christian Science, chiropractic, osteopathy, naturopathy, mechanotherapy, or other cult.

"'Quacks,' we sneer, yet we must admit the falling off in our former supremacy in the treatment of disease.

"This is a bitter admission, yet if we are honest enough to face the truth, we should look his thing fairly in the eye and demand to know why this defection.

"A few years ago, surely not more than three, Sir James McKenzie, of St. Andrews, Scotland, quoted in the London Times, from the London Lancet, said in effect that to diagnose a gastric ulcer, gall-stones, appendicitis, tumor, is not diagnosis in the strict sense of the word, but merely naming a prominent symptom, denoting the point of convergence of the causes of the diseased condition, but to say why this man is sick, to tell how and why he has departed from health, is not possible to him, in this wonderful clinic, in more than 10 per cent of the cases examined.

Dr. Cabot of the Harvard Medical School, says of the post mortem findings of the Massachusetts General Hospital, where precision is carried to the nth degree, that these have proven the diagnosis to be wrong in over 50 per cent of the cases, and this means that they have missed the principal trouble is more than half of the cases, and Mr. McKenzie says that even this is not diagnosis at all.

"Sir William Osler, late regius professor of medicine in Oxford, quoted the immortal Voltaire, as saying : 'We put drugs of which we know little, into bodies of which we know less, to cure disease of which we know nothing at all.'

"Quacks, just plain quacks, whether we are willing to admit it or not, for are not we doing the very things for which we condemn those whom we are pleased to call by this opprobrious name?

"In 1857-63 Antoine Bechamp announced his microzymian theory of fermentations, which he was pleased to say was also the theory of the beginnings of disease, recognizing germs as metamorphoses of the mycrozyma for economic purposes.

"Pasteur, a contemporary of Bechamp,

AVOID GAS AFTER EATING

Bloating and distention of the abdomen, drowsiness after eating, pressure and pain around the heart, hands and feet cold and numb, nervousness, are the more common symptoms of this torment—gas.

All is due to the fermenting of food in the stomach.

Physicians state that the best absorbent they have found for this foul gas is Hylands No. 10 Gastritis. These little tablets also quickly relieve the pain and distress that come after eating.

If people would only give some attention to their diet and carry these wonderful tablets for emergency use, they would quickly find that many of these ailments and symptoms would permanently disappear.

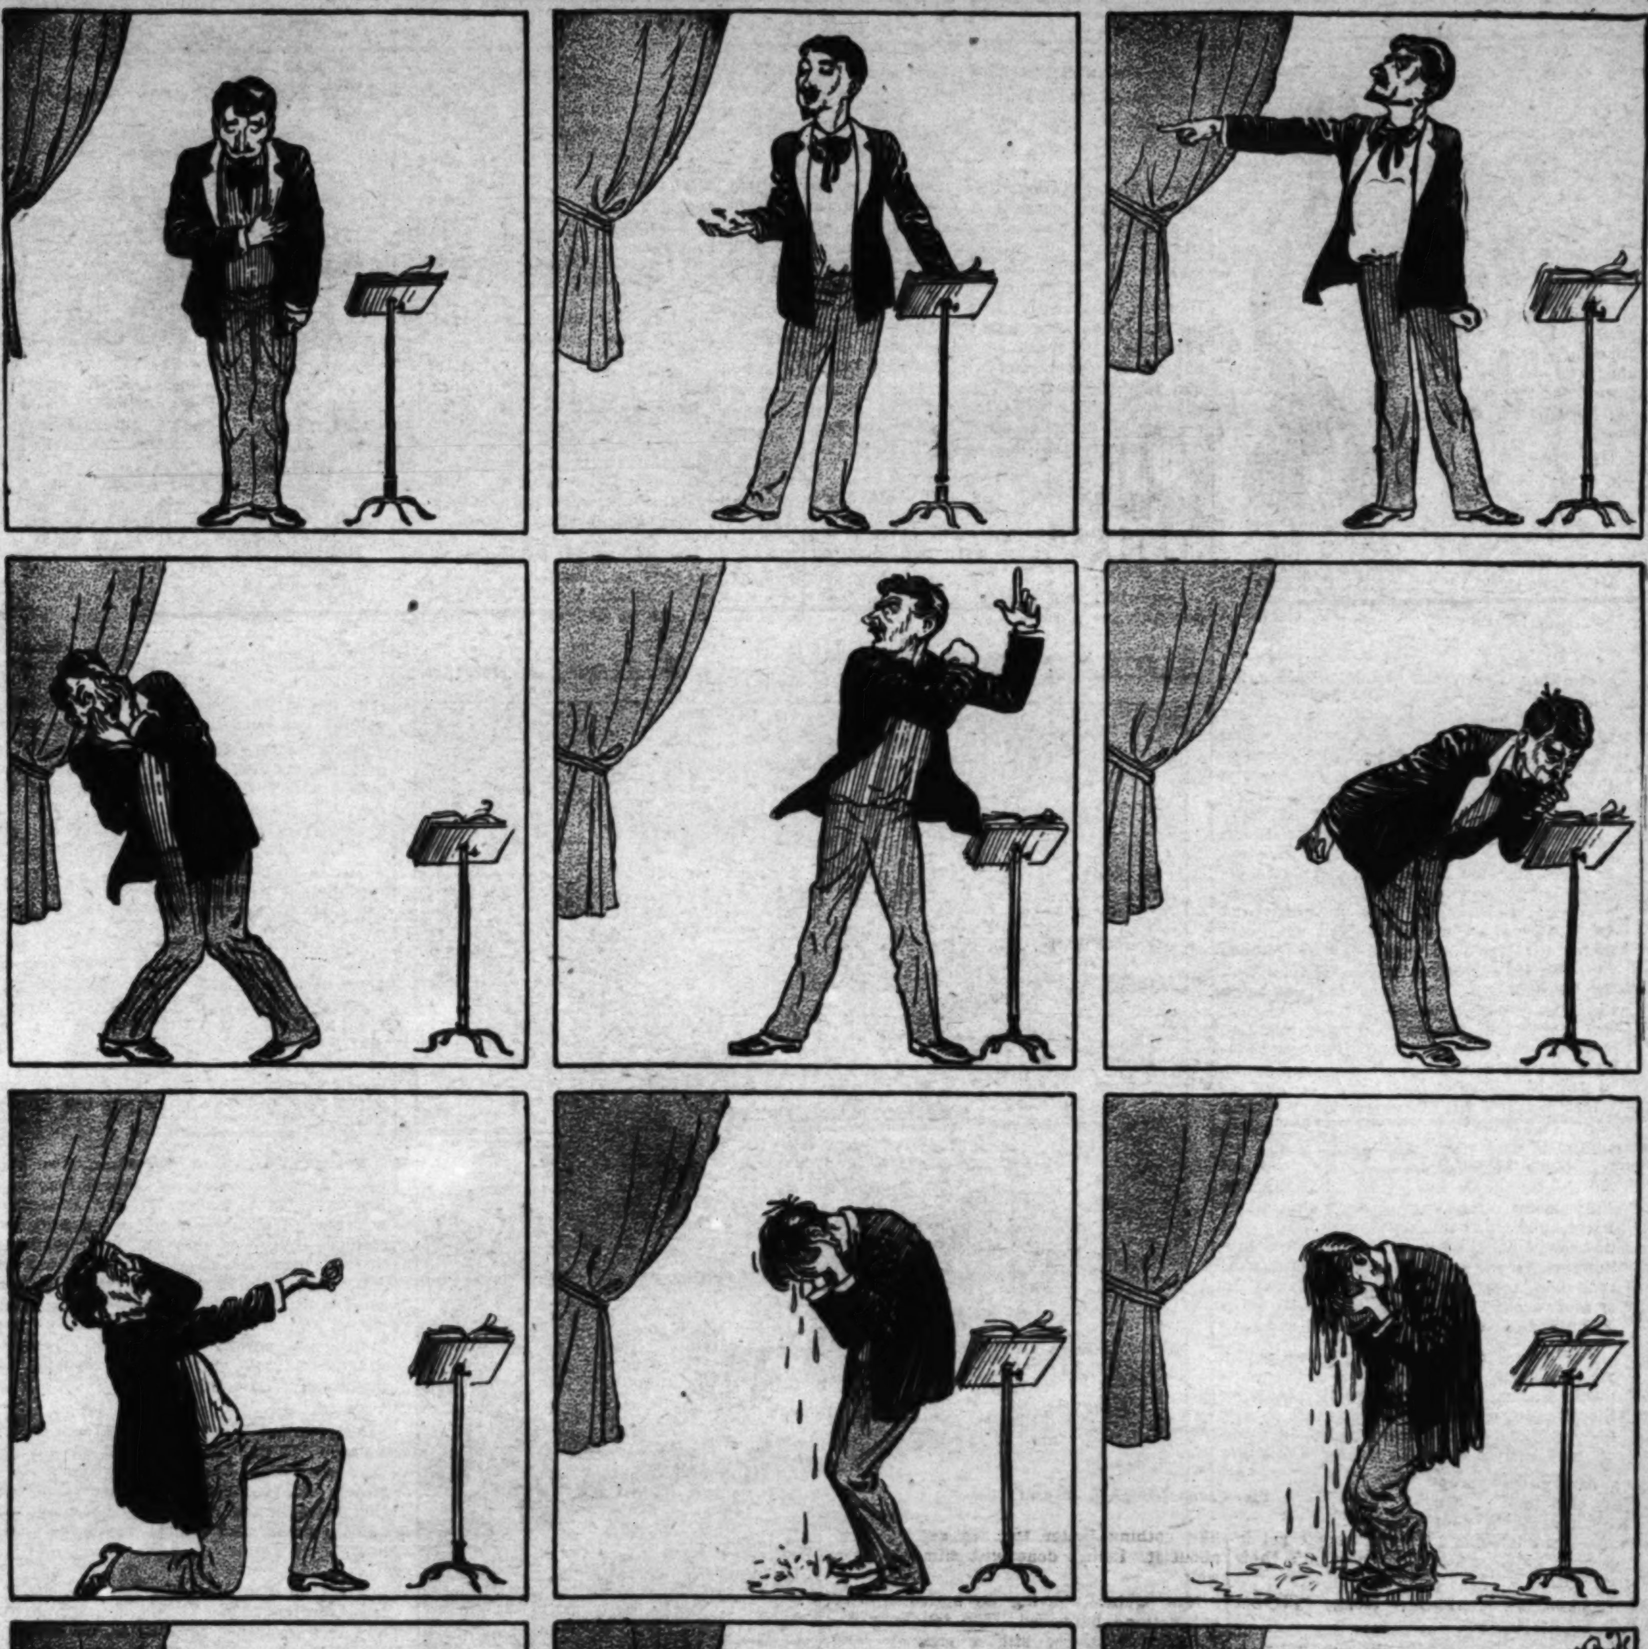
Sad Fate of the Author Who Gave a Too Realistic Reading of His Book

By CLIFFORD McBRIDE



CARE OF THE BODY

CONDUCTED BY
HARRY ELLINGTON BROOK, N. D.

Know Thyself

NO MANUFACTURER could succeed in business, if ignorant in regard to the machinery turning out the finished product he offers for sale. How much does the average man know about the digestive organs that transform the food he consumes into flesh and blood and brain, furnish him with heat and energy, and cause him to be sick or well, as the case may be? When his appetite urges him, perhaps because the lining of the stomach is inflamed, not that his system requires food, he goes into some place where they sell cooked "wittles," and orders anything that happens to tickle his palate. It may be pork chops, cut from the carcasses of garbage-fed hogs, that were scarcely able to totter through the masses of decomposing maggoty filth, and were ready to die before they were slain. Never mind. Shut your eyes and shovel it down. Then, after so many months, or perhaps a few years, he will be "mysteriously stricken by Providence."

In giving health advice to my consultants, nothing has impressed me more than this universal ignorance in regard to the simplest facts pertaining to the building of the body by food. However, this is not altogether surprising, when we consider that a great majority of the regular medical fraternity themselves know little on the subject. How much attention is given to dietetics in medical colleges?

It is no wonder that the "layman" is puzzled, when he finds, in addition to many good suggestions, so great a number of dietetic fads and follies put forth. Unless a person has given some study to the subject of food values, he naturally becomes confused.

Thus, among other dietaries, we have the vegetarian, fruitarian, raw cereal, nonstarch, Salisbury, or rare beef, the milk diet, and a number of others, while some amiable but misguided enthusiasts even go so far as to claim that in time we may be able to live on air.

It is not necessary that you should become a food faddist. On the contrary, the man who is continually speculating about what he eats, and how the food is going to work in his "innards," is on the high road to dyspepsia, and perhaps to insanity.

If you have not made any study of food values, and have not learned what you should eat, and what you should not eat, in order to acquire health and vitality and efficiency, and to avoid disease, then make up your mind to do so, without further delay, by reading some good books on the subject, or getting advice from one who knows. You will find such information the best investment you ever made.

Then, after you have learned what is the right thing for you to do, "forget it." That is to say, don't be always brooding over your diet. What would you think of a captain of a big trans-Atlantic liner who should spend most of his time pawing over the coal in the vessel's hold? Also, remember that it is not an occasional lapse from a right dietary that does harm, but the continual eating of wrong food, or of wrong combinations of food, or of too much food, from day to day.

After you have once adapted a rational dietary you may permit yourself occasionally to kick over the traces. In fact, in our complex and unnatural modern life, it is well for a man occasinally to "sin" a little dietetically. Too much monotony is a bad thing.

Safety Valves of the Body

THE pores are safety valves of the body. It is natural for men to sweat every day. When they lead a sedentary life, and do not sweat naturally, they should do so artificially.

The carnivora do not sweat through the pores. That is another proof that man is not carnivorous. It also shows the cruelty of muzzling dogs.

There are various methods of inducing artificial perspiration—steam and dry heat, air, electric light and wet packs. Each has its advantages. The main thing is that you sweat at least once a week. Once a day is better.

Two thousand years ago, the Romans were far in advance of us, in regard to caring for the skin. Wherever they went, on the farthest confines of their great empire, one of the first things they did was to erect large artistic baths, of stone and ornamental tiles. Ruins of these are found all over Europe, and Northern Africa. In the city of Bath, and in London, Roman bathing pools are still used.

The Roman bath was always followed by massage and oiling of the skin, a hygienic measure, restoring to the skin fat removed in bathing, equalizing the temperature of the body, and tranquilizing the nerves.

An ordinary hot bath does not cleanse you, however much you may scrub. If you doubt this, take a hot bath, with a prolonged scrubbing, then adjourn to a Turkish bath and note the results. They will surprise you.

See that you get a thorough sweat at least once a week. It is one of the first rules of health.

"Honesty is the Best Policy"

HOW many children are taught in the home, nowadays, that "honesty is the best policy"? I do not think I am exaggerating when I say that the average parent speaks before his children of little acts of dishonesty he has "put over" on someone. And he does it lightly, even jokingly.

A child hears his father say: "The butcher gave me a quarter too much. But," he adds laughingly, "I didn't tell him about it, you bet." Or the children will hear how their father helped himself to fruit from someone's orchard, in his absence—this also is told as though it was a good joke.

Either parents do not care, or they don't realize that if a child is not taught to be honest in small matters he will not be honest later in life, in large affairs. In time he begins to look upon honest people as old-fashioned fogies. If a companion objects to some petty act of dishonesty, he is told not to be a "fool."

It is a most deplorable condition of affairs.

Perhaps this laxness in the home would be counteracted to some extent if the schools taught the children plain, simple morals of every-day living—that it is as sinful to cheat a storekeeper as a friend, as sinful to steal from the rich as the poor. But the schools teach nothing whatever about morals. They have no place in the educational system.

When a child hears men—and women, too—on all sides talking in an offhand manner of some small act of dishonesty, what is to be the result?

The result is seen in the unparalleled growth of crime of every sort in this country.

In an article in Good Housekeeping, by William G. Shepherd, we are told that more than one-half of our American school children will, under temptation, have an unethical outlook on life. They show more than this, that under temptation more than half of them will cheat and lie and steal. These tests, we are told, were conducted scientifically. One of them, known as the "True-False" test, has been applied to thousands of children in the United States. After each statement given to a child to test its moral viewpoint are printed the words "True, False" and the child is asked to underline the word which he believes describes the statement. Here is the viewpoint presented by some children:

"It is not wrong to steal from one who has secured his wealth dishonestly."

"It is more honorable to have charge of an office than to work at a trade."

"Stupidity is more sinful than deceit."

"Unnecessarily failing to meet an appointment on time is not immoral and unChristian."

"It is true that our duty is greater to secure justice for the people of our own race and religion than for others."

"Cheating a railroad is not so much a sin as cheating a person."

"It is not the pupil's duty to call attention to the fact that a teacher has given him too high marks."

"It is true that if a storekeeper gives you too much money it is all right to keep it, because he would probably do the same if you paid him too much."

"Thousands of American children," writes Mr. Shepherd, "assented to these statements when they had an equal opportunity to dissent from them by merely making a mark with a lead pencil. Nothing they had received in school or at home in the way of religious instruction caused them to mark their paper otherwise. Their answers afforded proof that under American life, 'way down deep into its very childhood, there is unmorality in thought and downright approval of dishonesty.

"Another test—the Purchasing Test—tried children with the temptation to be dishonest. A shoekeeper—taken into the confidence of the examiners—gave the child purchasers a dime too much in making change. The test was to see how many children—and which ones—would bring back the dime to the teacher. The result was that 64 per cent of the children did not return the dime, either to the teacher or to the store.

"The scientists who made this test insist that their selection of children was made so carefully that they feel safe in assuming that 64 per cent of all America's children would have done as these children did."

"All children, without question of creed," comments the New York Times, "must be brought within the range of ethical and moral teaching in the school. . . .

"Apart from program and credits, it is encouraging to behold the major divisions of the churches uniting in an effort not only to give all the children entrance into their spiritual heritage, but also to develop in them the virtues which are at the basis of all sound citizenship—without which our whole social structure will be as the house built on the sand."

Who Are the Quacks?

THE State Board of Health is waging a campaign against medical quacks. A good thing, if done rightly—if conducted fairly and impartially. Members of the drug dispensing, serum-injecting and carving school have a pleasant habit of referring to members of all other schools as "quacks." It is as easy—and often as unjust—to call a man a quack as it is to call a man a crank. Many of those referred to as quacks are better men and better physicians than those who sneer at them. There are, of course, quacks in every school, but it is a fact that many heartless "specialists" have M.D. diplomas hanging in their offices.

Filtered Ultra-Red Rays

Quick and Safe Relief

For You Who Suffer Pain

Eighty per cent of the sun's radiant energy is the ULTRA-RED RAYS—the "thermal" rays upon which all life depends. Without sunlight there would be no life. The ULTRA-RED RAYS, being constructive to all life, are deeply-penetrating—life-perpetuating rays and deep down in the tissues are converted into heat. This conversive heat dilates the blood and lymph vessels and thus normalizes the flow of liquids in the tissues. This relieves tension, inflammation, and PAIN.

All disease and pain—inflammation—are caused by improper circulation.

Dr. White made this amazing discovery after many years of intensive study. He found that by passing heat through a specially devised "chemo-chromatic filter," he could generate great quantities of Ultra-Red Rays, producing the effect of the invisible deep-heating rays of the sun.

And he discovered, too, that this Ultra-Red-Ray generator could be made for home use and produced in quantity for a price within the reach of everyone.

It is called Dr. White's Deep-Heat PENETRAY PAD, because of its remarkable power of producing deep-heat penetrating rays. And it is manufactured and sold for a little more than the ordinary heating pad costs.

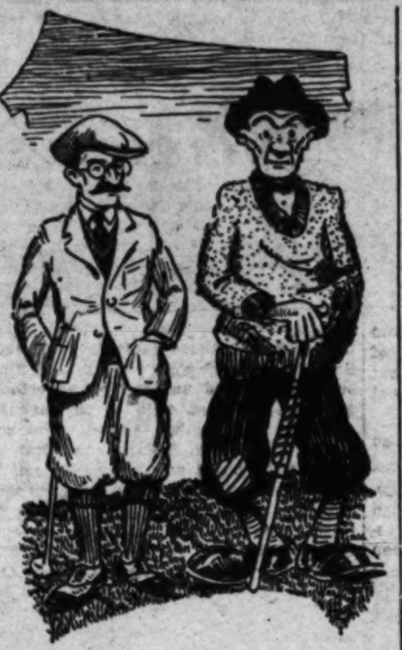
ALL THAT GLITTERS IS NOT GOLF

By BARRIE PAYNE



"Johnson's game was rotten—unspeakably rotten! Even worse than Judson's."

WE ONCE knew two golfers whom we shall call Judson and Johnson. (their real names were Jones and Smith, or A and B—we forget which.)

Judson was a stickler for sartorial correctness. A caucus of tailors always sat in conference for three days and nights before starting work on a pair of his knickers. His shoes were built to order and made from the choicest leather. The wool in his imported hose was taken from sheep that had been brought up on a special diet. The threads that went into the hose were carefully weighed, tested and counted, lest one stocking be heavier than the other and throw him off balance. The silk for his garters and shirts came from a picked group of silkworms that had been required to pass a literacy test. The best and most expensive caps were never quite good enough for him. The plans and specifications for his collar buttons were carefully worked out by the best architects and draftsmen in the country. His underwear, fashioned in Paris by famous designers, frequently had to be sent back for an alteration of .03 millimeters in the neckband or something of that sort. One year he sent his valet on a tour around the world in search of a golf sweater of a certain desired shade.

And when it came to his playing equipment he was even worse! He bought a whole hickory forest in hope of obtaining therefrom just one new driver shaft to suit his fancy. After 194 trees had been made up into sample clubs he finally found one that he thought would do, on a pinch. All the steel that went into his clubheads had to be tempered, processed and shaped according to a certain formula. He insisted that he must have a person of the very highest intelligence to serve as his caddy, and finally employed a college dean to work in that capacity. All his golf balls had to be carefully tested as to weight, size and balance, the tests being made with the most delicate instruments obtainable. His locker at the club, modeled after a bank vault, was closed with a time lock. His golfing tools and regalia were insured for an unbelievable sum.

Oh—you want to know what sort of game he played? Are you expecting us to say that his game was rotten? Well, you win. It was.

And now we come to Johnson. Johnson cared not the smallest fraction of a hang what he wore, what sort of clubs he played with, whether his ball had a cover on it, or who his caddy was. He played at times in overalls, occasionally in soiled tennis trousers, but more often in the ragged wreck of what had once been tweed knickers. His golf sweater was a faded, dirty affair made for a man twice his size. It fit him like the bedroom paper on the bathroom wall. He wore this sweater at all seasons of the year for the good and sufficient reason that his one golf shirt had no back in it.

His clubs looked like poorly-preserved relics from some old Sotch museum. The shafts were warped and split. Most of the clubheads were rusty, worn and loose on their shafts.

Can you guess what sort of game Johnson played?

Huh?

No, that's wrong.

Johnson's game was rotten—unspeakably rotten! Even worse than Judson's.

A Few Short Putts

We know an old player, a crafty old soul,
Who never takes more than six strokes on a hole.
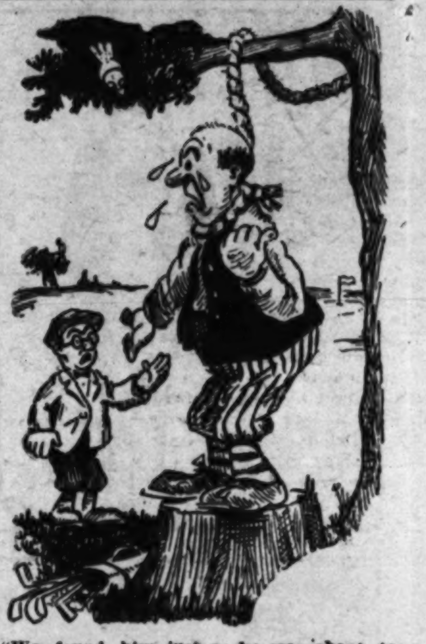
An excellent player? No, never and nix!
He always picks up after he has had six.

We found him just as he was about to hang himself from the limb of a tree. "How come?" we asked. He explained, "After twenty years of golfing I at last shot a hole in one—while playing alone, with not even a caddy to prove it by."



"We found him just as he was about to hang himself from the limb of a tree."

Rich man, poor man, beggar man, thief,
What are they doing?—merchant, chief,
Wise man, dumbrute, grouch and fogey?
All out chasing Colonel Bogey.

John D. Rockefeller, Jr., announced some months ago that he intended to learn golf if his money held out. We take pleasure in announcing that he still has a few pennies left—but if he has succeeded in learning golf he has concealed the fact from us.

Unfortunately for young Rockefeller, a golf ball is no respecter of millionaires, and a perect swing is something that his cash will not buy.

Little drops of water,
Little grains of sand
Make the blank-blank hazards
In which we always land.

You remember, do you not, the ancient wheeze about the farmer who dug the old abandoned well and, after sawing it into three-foot lengths, sold it for post holes? Well, at the last meeting of the U. S. G. A. that joke was revised to read: "—and, after sawing it into six-inch lengths, sold it for golf cups." The new version goes into effect July 1, 1924. Humorists are hereby warned.

Every third day, or thereabouts, we pick up a paper and read of some golfer who has invented a hook-proof and slice-proof golf club. We used to get a big kick out of those items, but they no longer thrill us. Possibly such a club can be built, but we notice that the non-hook and non-slice clubs usually turn out to be non-anything clubs. And when if such a club is perfected, the powers that be will promptly rule it out, so why all this useless expenditure of mental energy?

Another dumb remark, overheard on the course: "If they can't find a heavyweight that can whip Dempsey why don't they match him against two lightweights? A threesome in the ring would be something new in fights, and it ought to make a big hit."

If a man who holds the law in contempt is a 'scofflaw," then he who lacks a proper awe and reverence for golf is, we suppose, a "scoffgolf," and should be prosecuted.

In an ancient dialect of Scotland golf was formerly known as "gouff." Whittle your own wheeze.

EYEBROW STYLE NO LONGER TIPS OFF CHARACTER

CHARACTER study through the medium of the eyebrows has suffered a setback on account of the modern fashion of plucking the hair that nature provided as a protection to the sight organs. It has got so that it is virtually impossible to look at woman and tell if she has a balanced mind, is irritable, jealous or is an inventive genius.

Of course not all women pluck their eyebrows and their lives and natures remain an open book to the character analyst, but the others, while they may conceal the fact that they are untrustworthy or designing, may also hide their good qualities, such as love of home, tenacity of purpose, mental application and evenness of thought.

Eyebrows, in their natural state, may be bushy, squarely blocked, heavy or thin, standing straight or running crosswise, and in a hundred other combinations. Each arrangement means something, or did mean something, before the beauty specialists interfered and gave all their customers the same standing in character circles.

When plucked eyebrows first became stylish the "baby arch" was the most popular with those who adopted this system of changing their personal appearance.

But styles change in eyebrows as in coats, hats and shoes. The "baby arch" fell into the discard and the straight line eyebrow became quite the latest thing. In this the hair extends from the nose to the natural terminus of the brow, but it is reduced to a thin; black line.

Now, in the natural state, the arched eyebrow depicts a negative instead of a positive nature, the follower instead of the originator, lack of mental application, poor memory and a dreamer. And in the same manner the present style of a straight eyebrow depicts a balanced reason and "shows masculine intensity in turn of mind and manner of thought."

With eyebrows artificially treated failing as a test character analysis may be forced to fall back on the contour of noses, the curves of the mouth and the crow's feet in the eyes to arrive at their conclusions.

Getting Boresome

I've loved you many and many a month,
And I am not repenting;
If you but loved me in return,
I should not be lamenting.

If you but deigned to smile on me,
Why, I should be in Heaven;
Of all the dozen girls I love,
I'd cast away eleven.

But since you don't return my love,
And will not kiss me, dearie,
I shall not love you evermore—
Already I am weary.

WHY IS A CIRCUS?

of the death of a group of wonderful performing lions by being secretly fed meat mixed with ground glass; and the poisoning of a troupe of highly trained dogs that constituted the feature act of an opposition show.

On one occasion the advance crew of a big show learned of the shipment of a large quantity of advertising matter to its rival. One of their own members posed as a representative of the other institution and under an assumed name sent the "paper" by prepaid express to a town a thousand miles distant. The rightful owners subsequently recovered it, but in the interim they traveled an entire week practically unannounced while flashy posters greeted the passerby from numerous oppositon billboards. From the viewpoint of the guilty, it was only a case of capturing the enemy's ammunition.

Beating a Prairie Fire

A SHOWMAN with whom I once "trouped" told me of a very unusual and somewhat exciting experience—which I verified from other sources—and here repeat in the polyglot of the circus, as it was related to me:

"I've had close calls in my time but the nearest I ever come to sleeping in a wooden kimona was when I was hitting the grit with the Barnum trick through Western Kansas. It was late in the fall and we was making a Sunday jump. Our outfit was led by the boss hostler who acted as guide.

"While we was traveling leisurely along a narrow prairie trail with tall grass on each side, we noticed that the air got misty and considerably warmer and was full of insects and wild birds. They was flying swift and so low that you could reach up from the wagons with your mitts and grab 'em. Quite a number of quails and prairie chickens fell in the trail and they was so tired that they could hardly crawl out of the way of the teams.

"The trail begin to swarm with snakes, frogs, rabbits and other wild things, all hurrying along in the direction we was going. They didn't seem to be a bit afraid of each other or of us, but kept popping out the long grass and taking the trail for it. They all acted as if they was daffy and we couldn't figure out what ailed 'em.

"Then our menagerie begin to git dippy; the monkeys commenced to scream like scared children; the lions, tigers and other big cats begin moaning in a way altogether different from their reg'lar language of thundering roars and growling and snarling noises. The zebras neighed, the horses whinnied and our trained dogs whined. The birds in our aviary screeched as loud as they could and the elephants begin flapping their ears and trumpeting. The camels and other led stock then got a stack of chips and sit in the game. Everything begin to get unruly and the racket our show set up got louder and louder.

"While this general chorus was going on we were rubbering in every direction trying to locate the bomb that the menagerie seemed by instinct to sense was about to land in our trench. We could now see a big black cloud way off behind us. Then we noticed that the air was gitting more smoky.

"Then a guy comes along on a galloping horse and he shouted to us that the prairie was on fire and for us to hurry and try and make the river or we'd be burned to death. When we got next to our danger we was about as pleased as a turkey at the sight of the family ax. The men looked worried and the women turned pale.

Began to Get Dark

"NOT a bit of air was stirring, the black smoke was coming nearer and hid the sun and it got dark like it sometimes does just before a heavy rain. The driver gave the eight white lead horses the whip and they started off like scared deer.

"The whole line now moved along at top speed and we kept up this clip till some of our horses that was straining every muscle was ready to drop, and still no river was in sight. The fire was much nearer now and the big scorching blaze was gaining on us fast.

"The advance teamster was afraid his horses would drop in their tracks and block the narrow trail and be stopped; and this brought the whole procession to a halt. Believe me, pal, every giggle in my system was taking a holiday about that time and it looked to me like all of us was due for the door marked 'exit,' but nobody let out a bleat.

"We held a hasty conference and we got hep that our best bet was a back fire. So we sent several guys running ahead to set fire to the grass in different places in front of us. In a few minutes the fire behind us would get us and the high grass ahead of us was burning like shavings soaked in oil. The horses was again given the whip and by yells and blows forced to dash through two high walls of burning grass ahead of us. As we went through the back-fire we'd started, the menagerie seemed to go mad with terror and the awful clamor they set up could be heard for miles.

"We all safely reached a big charred patch where our back-fire had burned up all the grass and we stopped. The smoke and flame of the main fire joined the fire we'd started and passed on both sides of us.

"The air was about as cool as the inside of a blast furnace and the smoke came near suffocating us. The menagerie still kept up its racket. The cat animals was uttering soul harrowing rumblings; their eyes was as red as ripe currants and they ran back and forth in their cages with ears pricked forward and their tails swishing.

"We sure was kept busy holding the stampeded horses, the eight leaders giving us the most trouble. They seemed to have gone completely nutty and at last broke away and before we could stop 'em, eight of the swellest looking horses you ever lamped dashed into that awful blazing furnace and cashed in.

"When we first realized our danger, we thought sure the camels was booked for the long count, but believe me those long-legged things can take long steps and when they begin running wild on the bases, they make a running jackrabbit look like he was anchored.

"Most of us felt certain that the elephants didn't have a chance, but we found out when a bull gets scared he moves about as fast as light travels. They seemed to know just as well as we did what they was up against and when the wise old female leader of the herd gave a certain signal and started to pull her freight, the others lost no time in following her. The trainer yelled at her to stop, but she paid no more attention to him than a miser does to a beggar.

"When a couple hours later we reached the river, the elephants was on the other side standing in the water where they knowed they was safe, waiting for us."

TWO WEEKS NOTICE

mouth shut, that's all you've got to do. Here—he found his wallet—"I guess you've earned the rest of that money I promised you—"

"But, Mr. Smith!" Jenks stammered. "How about your trip? How about your old home? You said you were homesick—"

"I was," John Smith agreed. "I was damn near dead of it. But, son, I'm at home right now. Yes, sir, here is home-sweet-home to me for the present—and here I stay!"

On a fine fall day about three months later two important looking strangers alighted from a limited train and had themselves driven hurriedly through the streets or Othee to a side-street hardware store known to them by description.

The store did not accord with the description given them. It was dazzling in a coat of fresh white paint with black trim. The new plate glass display windows were bright—one with a few choice kitchen utensils, the other featuring a washing machine of spotless enamel, white, with a plate glass let into its middle to display the agitation of a sudsy, soapy sea.

The interior of the store was equally captivating with wide aisles, glittering displays of cutlery and novelities and new plate glass show cases. There were half a dozen customers present at the time and two brisk clerks were kept busy attending them. In only one way did the place answer descriptions, the sign above it proclaimed:

LANSING & SMITH
Hardware
"The Washing Machine Kings"

The strangers demanded John Smith. A clerk told them that Mr. Smith was in the country for the day. They asked for Caspar Lansing. Mr. Lansing was very busy, in conference with Mr. Albee, a local merchant. The clerk doubted if they could be disturbed. When Caspar Lansing spared them a moment, he gave his visitors information which sent them scurrying past outlying farms in a rented touring car.

They found John Smith in the kitchen of a farmhouse. Clad in spotless white flannels, coatless, he was lecturing suavely on the merits of an electric washing machine which stood hitched up in the middle of the floor. As he lectured he fed the farmwife's weekly laundry into the washer's capacious mouth, and guided freshly-washed clothes through the electric wringer, and all without getting a spot of water on his immaculate raiment. John Smith's eyes were sparkling, his voice was firm and mellow, and the flow of his eloquence was a perpetual delight to the farmer, the farmer's wife, the hired girl, and five small girls and boys ranged in a group about him.

"John Smith!" his visitors gasped.

John Smith wheeled at hearing his name. He knew them in a second—Burgess and Reed, two directors of the Eureka Manufacturing Company. But he showed no astonishment.

"You boys wait outside until I've finished," he said coolly. They would have protested, but he came closer and hissed, "Outside, you damn fools! Do you want to spoil a sale for me?" As they retired the directors heard Smith's smooth explanation, "My assistants remind me I have many other places to visit this morning. If you'll just look over this time payment contract—and sign your name there in the lower, corner, on the dotted line."

The astonished directors of the Eureka Manufacturing Company sat on a kitchen step, watching the ducks and chickens in the barnyard, and considered the astonishing end of the six weeks' search for John Smith, a search which had employed a dozen detectives before Jenks was located in Chicago and a real clew secured. They had passed an anxious six weeks, and had had a hard journey, and had met a surprising rebuff at the end of it; but they were in desperate need, and they had to wait patiently on the doorstep for John Smith, whether they liked it or not.

John Smith went back to Othee with his visitors.

"Caspar," he grinned at his partner, "Amos Bird has made a mess of the business. He got the Eureka Company in a jam, and they want me to go back to straighten things out. I've made my terms with them—complete control again, for as many years as I want to stay. Want to go back with me Caspar?"

"Albee was in this morning, and agreed to buy us out at our own figure." Caspar answered. "I guess now he knows the town can't support two hardware stores! And maybe I had better go with you, Johnny. I'm safer with you."

John Smith and Caspar Lansing sat in the president's office of the Eureka Manufacturing Company. It was the morning of John Smith's triumphal return. Miss Lee, the stenographer, entered.

"Take this, Miss Lee," said John Smith:

"Mr. Amos Bird, Eureka Mfg. Company:

"Dear Sir—It will be necessary for us to accept your resignation from the employ of this company two weeks from this date. I remain, and so forth—"

Caspar caught his friend's arm and clutched hard. "Don't you do that!" he cried. "Don't you do it, Johnny. Bird is a good man for his work, and you know it. It's not fair to fire him—"

"Bird is too damn young—a mere infant," John Smith growled, striving to conceal a grin.

"It's not fair!" Caspar repeated vehemently. "And I—I won't stand for his being fired, either. I'll quit right now if you do that, Johnny—"

"Tear up that letter, Miss Lee," said Smith quietly. "I guess I won't need you any longer.

When Miss Lee had gone, John Smith turned on Caspar with the wide grin in full control of his face. "Bully for you, Caspar! Bird is a good man—in his place—among the juveniles. I only did that for your sake—figuring you had that satisfaction coming to you, if you wanted it. I'm glad you didn't stand for it—mighty glad. Why, Caspar, the way I feel right now, remembering all I went through out there in California, I wouldn't fire a yellow dog out of the old Eureka plant."

Worker Pays $12 Out of $100 He Earns, in Taxes

It is estimated that the national income, the combined earnings of the entire country, amount to about $58,000,000,000 a year.

Out of that income the American public is being asked to contribute more than $7,000,000,000 to maintain its national, State and local governments. Out of every $100 that an American earns he must, therefore, pay $12 to some government official.

According to official figures, there are 41,000,000 people in the United States above the age of 16 who are employed in some gainful occupation. They represent the nation's earning power.

The total government debt in the United States is $32,000,000,000.

This means—assuming that the burden of debt and taxation can be evenly distributed—that every workman, every stenographer, every clerk and every mechanic in the country is in debt for his government to the extent of $787. This must be paid through taxes.

Thus far the people of the United States have been able to pay their taxes and to pay the interest on their government debts without damaging their industries and without imposing undue hardships upon themselves.

The thought, however, which we must keep in mind as a nation is that conditions may not always be favorable; that we must not presume too far on our past good fortune, and that the tax burden which we can shoulder in prosperous times may prove a dangerous load to carry should we be forced into a lengthy period of depression—[From the Nation's Business.

DELPHI.—I am on the spot that ancients called "The Navel of the Earth." Almost under my feet was the den of the dragon, Pytho, slain by the sun god, Apollo; and I can throw a piece of marble from a statue or column into a hole in the rocks that may have been the mouth of the oracle of Delphi. The words of the oracle came from a hole in the ground, from which arose ill-smelling vapors said to have the power to intoxicate the bystanders. If this be true, the oracle must have had a bad breath.

It was the oracle that made the city of Delphi, which is now represented by the ruins about me. It was consulted by the republics of Greece and their leaders on all matters of moment, such as the making of laws, the beginning of war, and the rise and fall of nations and men. Alexander the Great believed in it, Philip of Macedon bowed down before it, and Solon the law giver, Pindar the poet, and Plato the wise man, all spoke of it with respect. But first let me tell you where Delphi is and how one gets there in the twentieth century. I came to Greece from Constantinople by ship and from Athens to Delphi in an American motorcar. The distance between the latter cities is 150 miles. In the ancient times everyone walked or rode on horses or in chariots. They went up from the Bay of chariots could not Corinth on foot, for climb the steep mountain. Delphi is situated on the slope of Mt. Parnassus as high up as the top of the Blue Ridge, and the mountain rises above it for another mile or more, seeming to touch the sky at two thousand feet above the height of Mt. Washington. A good automobile road now winds up to Kastri, a town near the site of the Oracle City.

The work of repairing the Parthenon, the chief glory of ancient Greece, is carried on from time to time. The great scaffolding of wood on one side enables students and archaeologists to examine and study the architecture at close range.

I am writing this in the midst of the ruins. The Bay of Corinth is more than two thousand feet below me, and the land drops in terraces until it is lost in the water. To my left in the valley I can see a pale green olive grove, its thousands of trees skirting the bay; and all about me are the remains of ancient temples and theaters and the paved streets of the old city laid bare by the archaeologists.

The ruins cover hundreds of acres, and they are backed by gigantic pink and gray cliffs, running precipitously upward for thousands of feet. I am sitting in the Temple of Apollo, to which I climb by the Sacra Via, a flagstone roadway lined with broken columns, bits of statues, and the beautiful carvings of the civilization of twenty-five hundred years ago.

The Temple of Apollo

THE Temple of Apollo is all gone, except for a column or so and the great stone blocks that made the foundation. Its floor covered almost one-third of an acre, and by my paces it was about 200 feet long and 75 feet in width. I have counted the columns from the holes in which they were set, and find it took fifteen to support the great roof. My guide tells me that the Oracle was supposed to be under the floor of the temple; but so far no one has been able to find a cleft in the rock from which the sleep-producing vapor came forth. The supposition is that the words of the gods came out with the vapor. Above the crack was a golden tripod on which sat the priestess who interpreted the jargon uttered by the Oracle. No one but the initiated could understand the words, and she often put them in such terms that they could mean either success or failure. As I looked at the spot where the sybil sat, an American girl engaged in relief work on the island of Crete was standing beside me and said:

"I would like to have seen the old dame who put it over on them."

There was a temple on this site long before Rome was founded. It was burned to the ground and a new one was erected 548 B. C., when Cyrus was king of the Persians. Another temple was constructed two hundred years later at the time of Demosthenes, and additions were made by Nero and Domitian along about the beginning of the Christian era. In the vestibule of the temple were engraved the sayings of the Seven Sages, such as "Know thyself," "Moderation in all things," and "Nothing too much," and inside the building itself was a great stone the shape of half an egg, which marked the center of the world. On this stone the two eagles, which Jupiter had caused to fly from the opposite ends of the earth, met and roosted together.

The Treasures of Delphi

ABOUT this temple were treasure houses of the great cities of Greece, filled with gold and other wealth presented as offerings to the oracle. The treasury of the Athenians has been re-erected out of the fragments of the building, but the golden shields taken from the Persians in the year 340 B. C. are still unrecovered. Like the other treasure houses they were looted by the conquerers who overran Greece, Sylla, who later besieged Athens, used the Delphic treasures for the payment of his troops, and Nero divided the plain below here among his soldiers and took five hundred statues from the temple to Rome. At the time of Pliny there were still three thousand statues at Delphi, and the country about was one vast museum.

Higher up on Mount Parnassus are the remains of the great theater, and higher still those of the stadium where ancient games were held just as modern athletics are celebrated in the big marble stadium of the Athens of today. The stadium of Delphi was longer than that of Athens, but not so wide. The Athens stadium will seat 50,000 spectators.

The theater was an open-air hall paved with limestone slabs; it had seats of stone. It was in existence two thousand years ago, for at that time one of the distinguished citizens of Greece gave money for its restoration. The acoustics seem to have been perfect, for sitting below in the temple I could hear the sweet nothings that my secretary was whispering in the ear of the American maiden from Crete as they stood far above me.

Corinth and American School

MOST of the excavations at Delphi have been made by the French. A much greater work under the American School of Classical Studies has gone on at Corinth, where St. Paul went after his eloquent sermon on Mars Hill in Athens. Paul lived in Corinth a year and a half at that time with Aquila, the tentmaker, and he came back six years later and "there abode" three months in the house of Gaius. During his first stay he established a church and wrote the Epistle to the Thessalonians, and while he was with Gaius he wrote his Epistles to the Romans and Galatians.

The American school, however, has made no discoveries as to St. Paul. Its work has been in excavating the ancient city and reconstructing parts of the ruins. Corinth was at the height of its glory hundreds of years before Christ, and in the days of our Savior it was noted for its commerce and manufacture. It was then as large as Baltimore is now, and was a rival of Rome as to trade. It was one of the chief ports of the Mediterranean Sea. The historians say that it was twelve miles in circumference.

Later Corinth rebelled against Rome, and the Romans destroyed it. They sold its citizens into slavery, and for one hundred years it lay desolate. That was in 146 B. C. Julius Caesar refounded the town, and by the time St. Paul came, which was about fifty years after Christ, it was again celebrated throughout the Near East for its luxury, frivolities, licentiousness and vice. St. Paul takes account of these things in his Epistles.

Our American Archaeologists

BUT first let me tell you something about the American school of archaeologists and university graduates who are doing so much in digging up ancient Greece, and opening its wonders to the eyes of the world. About a half century ago the American Institute of Archaeology established a school of classical studies at Athens. The object was to give graduates of American universities and colleges an opportunity to study the classics and Greek art and antiquities on the ground, and to aid in original search in these subjects. The best of Greek professors were chosen, and nine of our colleges and universities undertook to pay the expenses until a permanent endowment could be secured. The school was established in 1882 and the first president of the board was James Russell Lowell. The committee which now runs the institution consists of representatives from thirty-three colleges scattered over the United States.

During my stay at Athens I went out to see the school buildings. They stand on the southern slope of Lycabettus looking out at the Acropolis and Mt. Hymettus. The ground for them was given by King George I of Greece, and additional space had been acquired partly by gift from the Greek government and partly by purchase. It is intended to erect a women's dormitory for American girls who want to come to Greece to study the classics.

This school has the largest and best library of ancient Greece known to the world. This was started by the school itself, some of the money having been given by John Hay, the Carnegie Corporation, and John D. Rockefeller. In addition to this, the school has just received the magnificent library of fifty thousand pieces collected by Dr. Joannes Gennadius, who for forty years was Greek minister at the Court of St. James. Dr. Gennadius was an eminent scholar and devoted his lifetime to the collection of these books. Dr. Herbert Putnam, the director of our Library of Congress, and one of the best authorities on ancient and modern bibliography, has appraised the library and says that it has no equal anywhere. A building is to be erected to house it. I understand that the school needs more money in order that it should have a permanent endowment to carry it on. Our great institutions, backed by the Rockefellers, Carnegies, and others, are aiding in this work and within a short time the endowment and other funds will probably be all that are needed. The present director of the school is Dr. Bert Hodge Hill, who was formerly connected with the Boston Museum of Art.

Every American student who comes here is expected to carry on some definite study or research and write a paper thereon. The school has many lectures, and its members go by automobile, on foot, and otherwise to all parts of Greece, the Greek government giving them half fare on the railroads. They have made important excavations, not only in Greece but about the site of old Troy and otherwheres in Asia Minor. Their work at Corinth has been carried on for more than thirty years. During this time they have laid bare the area of a large city, and have made many remarkable finds, including temples and statues which cast a new light upon ancient Greek civilization.

I took a train and rode out to Corinth a few days ago. The modern town lies not far from the western mouth of the Corto his bedside. They discovered heart murmurs and other alarming symptoms of an overdriven, breaking-down human machine and with the aid of John Smith's wife, who had been jealous of his office and work all her married life, finally banished him to California.

John Smith occupied the rear seat of his big touring car on a sunny morning some nine months after his resignation and banishment. The car had been parked at one side of a suburban boulevard. Jenks, his stocky little chauffeur, lounged over a brown paper cigarette in front.

The morning was fine and the California sun blazed down. Nevertheless, John Smith wore a light overcoat and around his neck a silken muffler was wrapped. He hated the coat and despised the muffler and dared not dispense with either. If he had, Jenks would have wrapped him up again, patiently, good-humoredly, but inexorably firm.

Nine months had passed and John Smith was an old man, an irascible, petulant, unhappy old man. On occasions he realized this fact and this morning was one of the occasions. They had made him old, Maude, his wife, and the eminent California specialist, and his business associates of the Eureka Company. Even Jenks. Jenks was in the conspiracy, too! Wrapping him up, bundling him in a silken scarf, wheeling him around the boulevards like a baby. Why, damn it, they wouldn't let him even drive his own car any more! No, sir! Tucked him in like a poor, doddering old wreck and tooled him over the boulevards at twenty miles an hour! And when he came home Maude would make him lie down for an hour before lunch!

Maude had her fun. She was wrapped up in the affairs of their second daughter, married just a little more than a year. Between Hilda and her husband and the prospective addition to their family Maude had plenty to occupy her mind. Thought of his daughter made him shudder. When her baby was born they'd all call him grandpa!

Worst of all, he coud get no news about affairs at the office—affairs of his own company—the company in which he still controlled forty-nine per cent of the stock. They kept that from him! Vague, cheerful, rambling letters came from his associates, letters recommending that he take up golf or tarpon fishing or tour the Yosemite. But especially golf. He despised golf.

Between Maude and the doctors and the conspiracy among his old associates John Smith had nothing left to think about but himself and he felt mighty sorry for himself.

Old! He roused, scowling fiercely, chewing savagely at the cigar he did not dare light because if he lit it Jenks would take it away from him. Old? Damn it, he wasn't old!—just past fifty—or was it forty nine? He never could remember whether you counted from birth or the first birthday! Old!

Bl-a-a-a-a!

A noisy, rattling, dust-covered flivver, sun-blistered, rusted, scarred and dented and overflowing with passengers, pulled off the road and parked just behind them. John Smith watched a worried, coatless man jump out and inspect a flat tire while a shapeless woman in a Mother Hubbard volunteered shrill advice.

"Mister, got a jack I can borrow?" the coatless man yelled it at John Smith.

"Jack? You bet you, neighbor!"

John Smith was up and out of his car, fumbling at the tool locker. "Let me, sir," murmured Jenks instantly at his side.

John Smith found the jack, but Jenks relieved him of it and handed it to the coatless man. They proceeded in a body to the rear of the flivver, got the jack under the axle and raised the car, now empty of passengers. They made quite a little crowd, including the coatless man's numerous family of small children. John Smith was pleasurably excited. Something had happened, something interesting! He found a rim wrench and started loosening nuts, preparing the rim, holding the damaged tire for removal. He got grease on his hands and enjoyed it.

"Let me, Mr. Smith." Jenks took the wrench from him.

John Smith began unlashing the spare from the tire carrier. Jenks relieved him of the task, kindly but firmly. Between Jenks and the coatless man they left him nothing to do but squat in the dust, watching with breathless interest the removal of the tire and the substitution of the rim carrying the spare one. Once a rim nut rolled away and he was allowed to hold that until it was needed. He felt it an honor.

The spare tire was locked in place, the damaged one strapped in the carrier and the jack no longer needed. "I'm sure much obliged," said the proprietor of the flivver. "Got to get down to San Pedro before noon. Job waiting for me there—same firm I used to work for in Jersey City—"

"You're from Jersey City? John Smith exclaimed with heightened interest.

"Left last March, all of us—"

"You drove it?"

"Well, we didn't care to walk, mister."

John Smith surveyed the battered Lizzie with new respect, almost fondness. It had come from Jersey City—they all had. They were home folks!

"Say," catching the coatless man's arm, "you know the Eureka Manufacturing Company in Jersey City?"

"Nope, guess not."

"Big concrete plant down near the river—electric sign a block long on the roof—"

"Can't place it, mister. There's such a lot of them factories."

"It doesn't matter," John Smith murmured, but he watched the flivver depart with a sense of hurt. From Jersey City! Why in the devil couldn't the man have known the Eureka plant? The coatless man's ignorance cut him deeply. It seemed like base ingratitude. He had done him a good turn and that was how he repaid! Couldn't even remember seeing that electric sign a block long—the sign he was so proud of.

A homesickness for Jersey City and the Eureka plant—a longing to hear the trucks rumbling over the cobbles, to smell the hot machine oil odor of the shops, the cool, varnishy interior of his private office, a longing to pull up his chair before a desk heaped high with waiting business—all this possessed him and left a bitter, galling taste on his tongue and a throbbing hurt in his heart. That was his life—and they had taken life from him!

Jenks's voice came to him: "Did you say to go on, Mr. Smith?"

"No!" he barked perversely.

Jenks ostentatiously referred to his watch.

John Smith submitted. "Oh, all right, I don't care. Wait, I'm going to ride in front with you."

Jenks closed up the windshield tight to protect his employer from draft. "Jenks, you're a damn fool," said Smith. The chauffeur grinned. "I'm no more an invalid than you are, Jenks—"

"No, sir."

"Then why in hell do you insist on treating me like a baby?"

Jenks shrugged and blew smoke from his nose. He had his orders.

John Smith thought hard for a quarter of an hour. "Jenks," he began innocently, "didn't you say your little daughter is in Chicago?"

Jenks brightened. "Yes, sir, with her grandmother—"

"And you haven't seen her for several years?"

"Not since her mother died, almost two years ago."

"But you'd like to see her, eh?"

The knuckles of the chauffeur's brown hands whitened as he gripped hard on the wheel. He nodded.

"You're going to see her—see her soon, too," John Smith predicted. "Say, you can drive this car across the continent, can't you? That Lizzie made it."

"I can drive this car anywhere there's land to drive it on."

John Smith nodded. He unbuttoned several layers of coats and brought out a wallet. From the wallet he began to sort out yellow-backed currency notes. He displayed a handful of these to Jenks with a crafty leer. My boy, there's five hundred there. Five hundred would help quite a lot in putting your little girl through school wouldn't it?"

"You said a mouthful, Mr. Smith!" Jenks replied.

"H-m! Well—maybe you'll get a chance to earn it. I was talking to the doctor the other day. He said he thought it would do me good to drive up to the Yosemite and spend a month or so in a good hotel up there. Jenks, I think we'll go touring in the Yosemite. You understand, the Yosemite?"

The chauffeur grinned. "Yes, sir. Oh, yes, the Yosemite, Mr. Smith!"

"All right. If we do go, Jenks, and you show a little reason about driving the way I like to be driven, there's going to be another five hundred for you when we get home again. But mind, we're just making a trip to the Yosemite!"

The town of Othee lies to the eastward of the Mississippi River, but considerably more than a thousand miles from Jersey City. It has three thousand inhabitants, enjoys a brisk trade supplied by the farming district about, but lacks in attractions for the tourist. John Smith, who had walked Othee's main street up one side and down the other, felt he had just about exhausted the attractions. He hadn't come to Othee to see the town, anyway. It was just one more dot on the road map, one milestone nearer to the Eureka plant in Jersey City.

Escape from his wife and doctor had been simpler than he anticipated. With her daughter's impending domestic crisis claiming her attention, Maude Smith had been glad to be rid of the care of her husband so long as she knew he would be in safe hands. And the specialist approved the change for him. They had tarried long enough in Yosemite for the fugitive to plant a series of pre-dated letters home—letters reporting his well-being which would be mailed from time to time, thanks to a well-bribed hotel bellboy.

His wife's correspondence would be forwarded and awaiting him in Chicago. Then they started over the coast-to-coast trail. All went well until Othee. There ignition trouble halted them, and while the car was being overhauled with the terrible leisure of garage mechanics John Smith raged up and down the street.

Fuming at the stupidity of Othee and the mid-afternoon heat, which was something to remember, John Smith turned into a shaded side thoroughfare. A sign brought him to a halt, excited and incredulous. "It can't be!" he exclaimed. "The thing's out of the question. Still, it might be a relative of his. I'll ask."

The sign was over a store—a dejected, dusty small-town store, which seemed about ready to give up the ghost and be done with an unsympathetic world. The sign announced:

CASPAR LANSING—HARDWARE

John Smith walked into the store. His critical eye saw that it was empty of customer's, saw that dust-covered stock crowded every available inch of floor space and impeded his progress; saw on every hand evidence of failure. A round little man came out of the shadows at the rear. His babyish face had brightened hopefully at sound of footsteps. Customers were a rare event with him. It was Caspar himself Caspar, assistant sales manager at the Eureka plant, John Smith's friend and crony for twenty-five years.

Caspar reported himself with numerous pauses to massage his bald head with the old-time circular motion that told of his perturbed mind. "You see, Johnny, after Bird fired me—"

"Bird!" John Smith snorted. "He's gone mad with the idea that anybody too old for rompers is too old to carry on business. Wants to make a day nursery out of the Eureka plant! I'd like to see him dare fire you while I was there!"

"Yes. Well, he fired me anyhow. And I had a couple of thousand dollars I'd saved, and I always wanted to own a business of my own. Wanted something I could build up. I—I had an idea I could sell things—"

"Caspar, you always were a natural born fool—"

"I suppose so, Johnny. I saw an advertisement offering this business for sale, and I came here. The owner, Mr. Albee, had a good little proposition. You see, it was the only hardware store in town—"

"I saw one on Main street just now, Caspar—"

"Yes, I know," Caspar sighed. "This was the only one when I came. Albee's price seemed reasonable. I raised the money—I pawned my life insurance, you see—and bought him out. It was understood between us that he was going out of business—"

"And he didn't!"

"You guessed it, Johnny. He started that store you saw on Main street two months after I came in here. He gave me his word he wouldn't—"

"You ought to have a thing like that in writing, Caspar."

"Yes, I guess I should. But he looked honest. I guess, the fact is, from what I've heard, all Albee wanted was to sell this store to raise cash to take a better location. And there isn't room for two stores in town."

Caspar sighed again, and began rubbing his bald head round and round.

"The pup!" John Smith snorted. "The low-down, yellow pup!"

"Yes, it looked to me as if Albee was kind of—sharp," Carpar admitted mildly.

"And now you're broke, eh?"

Caspar glanced about the dusty store, at the idle stock, and finally back to his friend. "Cleaned out," he murmured, evidently stunned at the prospect of his future. "Cleaned out. I guess I never was cut out to run my own business—and now I'm too old to learn—"

"Too old, hell!" John Smith began pacing up and down the crowded aisle, amidst kegs of nails, racks of adzes and axes, hoes, rakes, garden hose, lawn mowers, shovels, stacked tin pails, and a small regiment of patent domestic washing machines.

"Too old!" he cried. "Nobody's too old. You're not too old and I'm not too old! Oh, why—why in the name of sweet poverty didn't I think of something like this? Caspar, this last nine months have been hell—plain hell! And here you've been spoiling a perfect picnic that same time. Look here, I'll bet you dollars to doughnuts I could have taken this business of yours and chased that crook Albee out of town by legitimate competition in half the time it took you to lose all your money!"

"I know you could. You always were smart at selling, Johnny."

"And I am yet! It's not too late. It's never too late, Caspar. I'm just finding that out, and it's damn important to remember. Just paste that in your hat: It's never too late. It's worth money to know that."

He took another turn about and examined a washing machine. "What's the matter with this thing?" he demanded.

"Nothing. It's a fine machine. Runs by electricity—"

"There's a power plant in town?"

"Yes, and on most of the farms around here. I stocked up with them, figuring a modern community like this would eat 'em up. Nobody as much as nibbled."

"Try marking down the price a few dollars go get 'em going?"

"Can't. The manufacturer's contract fixes the price—"

"H—m! Well, look here, what's to stop you making a dicker with the electric company, then, and making every purchaser of a machine a free present of ten dollars' worth of electric power to operate their washers?"

"Nothing, except—I never thought of—"

"Ha!" John Smith grinned. "Well, I did! What's more, we'll do that very thing. Caspar!" He smote his old employee a tremendous blow across the shoulders. "We're going to show this old town new tricks. I've been spoiling for a fight these last nine months. Thank God, I've found one! You and I are going to get your friend Albee on the run and chase him out of business altogether, and we're going to start by selling washing machines. I've got some new ideas—"

"But, Johnny, you can't! Your health—your trip East to the factory—"

"Health! I'm twice as healthy as you are right now! As for the factory, Caspar, I never kidded myself a minute about that! Oh, I know! They'd all tell me how glad they were to see me, and glad-hand me around the shop and then shoo me out! That'd be the size of my visit. D'you think Bird would let me have a look in at real business, once he's got in the saddle? I never fooled myself about that but it was all I had to do just then. I was so darn humble I would have taken even those crumbs and given thanks. But now!"

Later in the afternoon Jenks, seeking his employer with the apologetic message that the car would be laid up until the following morning, was astounded, after a long search, to discover him in the window of a small, dusty, insignificant side street hardware store, where he was placing newly painted placards about an electric washing machine. John Smith's face was streaked with dust and sweat. He had removed coat and vest and collar. He looked a sight.

Jenks's news about the car only brought an impudent grin to John Smith's face.

"Listen, son," said he, "you catch the night train to Chicago and go visit your little girl and her grandma—and stay there until you hear from me. Forward any mail that's waiting for me, and keep your inth Canal, and it may be reached by boat through the canal, by railway, or by automobile. It is an ordinary little Greek city of about five thousand people.

The ruins lie about five miles away. There are Americans in charge, and it was with one of them that I wandered over the remains of the great past that are now coming to view. Among the excavations have been those of the waterworks and fountain, fed by the spring of Pirene made by the winged horse, Pegasus, which later came to drink and was captured by Bellerophon. Pegasus, as the story goes, struck the earth with his hoof and the water gushed forth, even as it did in Meribah when Moses struck the rock for the thirsting Israelites. The fountain dates back to from three to six centuries before Christ, and the water again flows out of the marble lion heads of the past into a square pit of stone. The American school has excavated the old aqueduct. The reservoirs fed by the spring had a capacity, all told, of 120,000 gallons, and in midsummer they ran about three gallons an hour.

Among the other excavations are those of the streets and shops of the city and the remains of a theater and the Temple of Apollo. The latter is said to be 2500 years old. It has columns eight feet in diameter and as high as a two-story house.

One of the most interesting discoveries to mê is that made as to the Oracle of Corinth, which gave forth decrees like the one I have described in my visit to Delphi. The Oracle at Corinth was connected by a subterranean passage, fitted with a mouthpiece that served as a speaking tube. The arrangement was such that the priest could crawl in underground some distance away, and by a little ventriloquism make his prophetic words come out of the mouth of the oracle. If the ancients had discovered the radio, they might have broadcast the words of the gods to all parts of Greece.

Repairing the Parthenon

AMONG the other excavations of the American school have been some on the Acropolis, that great hill of pink limestone rock, which rises straight up from the plain on which Athens stands to the height of a fifty story apartment house, or to almost the height of the Washington monument. It is right on the edge of Athens and commands a view of the city, the plain, and the ocean. It was the seat of government of ancient Athens under the Greek kings, and later was set aside to the worship of gods. It looks much like a great rock of rosy red marble with here and there a bit of grass or a blood red poppy peeping out of its crevices. The plateau upon the top contains, I judge, about ten acres, and upon it is the Parthenon, the most wonderful structure beauty and art ever created.

Imagine a forest of huge marble columns standing upon a marble floor the area of which is almost an acre. Let each column be as big around as the largest cart wheel you have ever seen and let it rise upward for thirty-three feet in a symmetrical form. Let it be fluted, and let its capital, rich in its plain Doric grace, uphold a wall of marble around which runs a frieze of the most wonderful sculpture of the world, and you have the skeleton of the building. The interior contains other columns and even in its ruins the building as a whole has a wonderful beauty. You see it for miles around Athens and it stands out before you as you come into the harbor at the Piraeus. At present the wall at one end is almost intact save the freize, which was carried off by Lord Elgin, and which is now to be seen in the British Museum in London. The Parthenon looks best in the evening. All of its ruins have the rich color of age and the columns turn to silver and gold under the rays of the setting sun.

There is now a great scaffolding of wood on one side of the Parthenon, and the reparations have gone on from time to time for generations. Some of the students of the American school have been making studies of the Erechtheum, a little temple hard by, and a book is just about ready for publication which will probably be the authority upon it for many generations to come. It is illustrated with the exquisite drawings of Gorham Philip Stevens, now director of the American Academy in Rome. The drawings were made early in the century when the scaffolding ran around the building.

Some Museums of Athens

THERE is a museum on the Acropolis filled with the results of the excavation there, and Athens itself has a national museum where one can build up in his mind the Greek of the past. The excavations are going on everywhere, and many new objects are being discovered. The Greek government is alive to the responsibility of safeguarding its antiquities, and runs a lottery, the income from which is used for digging up and caring for ancient Greece. This lottery has 255 prizes, ranging from $10 to $5000 each. It has been running for decades.

Wood is so scarce in Greece that roots and branches are carefully gathered for fuel. As much of the freighting is done by horses and mules, these animals resemble a traveling forest with the huge bundles on their backs.

The wonderful discoveries of Tut-Ankh-Amen in the Valley of the Kings have their counterpart in the gold and jewels unearthed by Doctor Schliemann and other Grecian explorers. The National Museum has masks of beaten gold, in which have been pressed features so lifelike that they seem ready to speak. I have the photograph of one representing the face of an old man which would serve as a portrait of the original, except that it has lost the tip of its nose. There are golden cups decorated with portraits, and vases of dull gold beautifully carved. Some of the cups would hold a half gallon, and the golden masks are as large as the tin wash basins outside the back door of an American farm house.

I am especially interested in the collections of jewelry, which so well show the follies and vanities of fashionable life five hundred years before Christ. Among other exhibits is the skull of a woman with the gold pin which once bound her tresses stuck to it. Time and decay have glued the pin to the base of her neck. Nearby are scores of gold rings for the fingers, a peck or so of gold anklets, and huge gold rings for the biceps, somewhat similar to the ivory bracelets worn above the elbows by our women of today. Some of the golden arm rings which came from Mycenae are three or four inches wide. They are of pure gold.

WHY IS A CIRCUS?

any part of the country included in their route, the plan was immediately changed, for "dead towns" could not be afforded.

If a small show "billed" a locality that a larger concern proposed later to visit, the latter would flood the vicinity with advertising matter and practically submerge the little fellows' "paper." Thus the stronger circus exercised a despotic right of strength that forced the lesser shows into each other's way, and compelled them to wage a well-nigh continuous disastrous warfare among themselves.

One of the most dreaded foes that menaced the wagon show was rain. Managers didn't then know the secret of making their tents waterproof by treating them with a fusible parafine solution. Discomforts galore awaited patrons who visited the badly leaking tents in rainy weather, and as this fact became generally known, the public got wise and rainy days put a crimp into the box office. A protracted spell of wet weather meant a heavy loss of "cash" to managers and some who lacked the lucre for financial strains were stranded.

Couldn't Keep Union Hours

THE show's daily routine was about as follows: At 9 at night, while the performance in the "big top" was still in progress, canvasmen dismantled the menagerie tent preparatory to rolling it on to the next town. When the "big show" was over and everything loaded on wagons, the "razorbacks"—as canvasmen are called in circus parlance—slept until they were awakened for breakfast. If hotel accommodations could not be obtained, they were lodged at private houses and if these were not available, they made themselves impromptu beds outdoors or under cover according to the weather. Breakfast was served at available hotels any time from midnight to 5 a.m., according to the distance of the "jump" to the next "stand."

The show traveled in two sections, the "baggage" train and the "cage" train respectively. The "baggage" train carrying the paraphernalia started several hours before the "cage" train, which carried the performers, band, freaks and menagerie. The executive staff, equestrians and star artists usually owned their own conveyance, and at a later hour—at increased speed—followed in the wake of the two trains that preceded them.

The route to be taken was crudely sketched by the advance agent and sent back to the management. The rutty roads in some localities were in such a deplorable condition that everybody would be so constantly jolted that sleep was next to impossible.

Sometimes it rained heavily and converted these wretched highways into seas of mud, and at frequent intervals it became necessary for the tired, sleepy riders to alight and walk through whipping torrents of rain in a black pit of darkness to the top of steep hills. Heavy wagons would sink to their hub in the mire and sometimes the whole train would be halted. By the light of flaring torches a quartette or sextette of draft horses would be hitched to the stalled wagon; and, stimulated by shouts, curses and oftimes blows, would extricate it by forceful co-operation. The wagons were exceptionally strong and could endure a severe strain, yet at times parts gave way and most of the poor, tired, struggling beasts, unable to procure proper footing, would lose their balance and tumble pell-mell into the mire. Then an elephant would be pressed into service. He would be stationed at the rear of the mired vehicle and speedily liberate it with his powerful push.

When the "cage" train arrived at its show town, it halted somewhere in the suburbs and then there was work for all. The travel-stained stock and gayly painted vehicles were washed and all equipment brightened up. At 10 o'clock the parade wardrobe was distributed. Performers donned conspicuous spangled satin and velvet costumes; musicians attired themselves in attractive uniforms; drivers put on high silk hats and brightly colored, extremely long coats with patent leather boots; horses were showily caparisoned; elephants were made resplendent in scintillating trappings; and the camels were robed in variegated, tinseled finery. A whistle was blown, a procession was quickly formed and paraded the town, headed by a score of prancing, gayly-plumed ponies hauling a huge, elaborately carved gilded band-wagon.

During the time that this glittering cavalcade was passing the crowds of gaping onlookers in the business sections of the town, the glaring band jazzed its inimitable circus "music." Rejuvenated elders nodded approval; eyes of the middle-aged sparkled with pleasure; young men and women couldn't make their feet behave; while excited, bubbling youngsters viewed the awe-inspiring spectacle with wondering eyes and shrilly shouted their approbation. When the last gilded vehicle rumbled noisily past the children's place of vantage, and the massive elephants went lumbering by, they screamingly followed the ear-piercing calliope to the show lot.

After the parade the performers doffed their showy clothes, had dinner, gave an afternoon performance, followed this with supper and then a night exhibition; after all of which came the heavy refreshing sleep of fatigue. Here you have a program that was repeated daily with little variation to the end of the season.

When "Good Times" Came

DURING the prosperous period immediately following the Civil War, wagon shows were very plentiful and many showmen rapidly grew wealthy. But sudden, unaccustomed prosperity generally exercises a detrimental influence and in most cases too much success is as ruinous as too much booze. These newly-rich managers of those strenuous times, when fight still permeated the air and bloody conflicts between "troupers" and "towners" frequently occurred, were of necessity courageous and militant.

Pronounced sudden success that nearly always breeds egotism and pride, intensified this belligerent spirit among managers and they grew arrogant and unreasonable. Therefore, when two successful rival concerns of somewhat equal size chanced to operate in the same territory, instead of arriving at an understanding by a conference, they stood off and glared at each other like a couple of bull terriers in the ring. One arbitrarily insisted that the right of way, by right of might, belonged to him exclusively, while the other naturally considered himself too important a factor to be bullied—and the merry war was on. Prolonged, bitter hostilities would ensue and often the troubled waters of contention were kept in a state of turmoil till one or both contenders foundered on the financial rocks.

The standard of morality among circus managers and their henchmen in those days was not very high and many unscrupulous and sometimes cruel expedients were resorted to by both contestants in order to harass each other. They "covered" each other's "billing matter," indulged in verbal vilification and libelled one another when their press agents could get it over through the press.

Health officials might be notified that disease had made its appearance among the live stock of the opposition and were advised to prohibit the afflicted show. Hub nuts of vehicle wheels were clandestinely loosed so that cage wagons would overturn en route, sometimes releasing wild animals whose recapture would entail the loss of so much time that the outfit could not make its next advertised "stand." Instances are cited clammy, his foot twitched. He was getting closer. . . . Tommy and Bob and Jane! They had faith. The thought burned its way, cometlike, across his mental horizon. . . . Could Kelly understand? . . . Somehow, there came a feeling that Kelly did understand. . . . The specter, there it was! . . . But he would conquer! . . . His foot was pushed down to the floorboards now! Under his racing helmet perspiration rolled in streams. He set his teeth. He would not yield. . . . He was at the exact spot. The track ahead became a blur to his eyes. His heart throbbed irregularly. But his foot stayed down. His mind still retained a vision of Kelly as he had seen him in every lap, but his gesture had changed.

Once more he made the circuit of the track. Again came the clammy hands, the perspiration, the rigid arms. He saw Kelly, but fainter. There was a smile on the specter's face, and Kelly waved at him in a manner no race driver can misunderstand. A spectral arm swept in a wide arc forward. It said as plain as words: "Step on her and let her roll!"

Less than 100 laps, 250 miles, of the race remained. Monroe was himself again, the Monroe of old, who yielded a place in speed to no man. But far, far ahead of him swept the field, fourteen splendid racing cars, all determined to beat him across the finish wire. A glance at the scoreboard on the back stretch told him that Logsdon in a Clifford Special was leading the race. He was in his hundred-and-sixth lap, while Monroe was in his hundred and second. Ten miles behind! That meant for the rest of the race he would have to average four miles more to the hour than Logsdon to win, provided Logsdon maintained his present speed. It meant accomplishing the well-nigh impossible, an average of between ninety-nine and a hundred miles an hour!

Coming across the starting line like a bullet, he slid up to his pit, pointing to his gas and oil tanks as he came. Before the car had fairly stopped eager hands tore at the fastenings on the tanks and radiator cap; in less than half a minute from the time he stopped he was on his way again. He was greeted with a tremendous cheer from the stands, but high above it all he fancied he could distinguish the friendly greeting from the car hood just behind his pit.

Several courses were open to Monroe. He might ride along at an average of ninety-five and come in third or fourth. He might drive faster and make second or third. By a super-human effort he had a chance, if everything went well, to take first or second. His teeth clicked. Rex Monroe never picked the easiest course. Provisioned for the rest of the race, knowing exactly his problem, he set out to solve it. Only for an instant did he consider playing safe and thus saving his friends' investmet. Something told him that they would not wish it. He made his next lap at an average of ninety-six miles an hour, the fastest he had attained in the race. He made the next one at ninety-eight. Then he jumped his average to an even hundred.

At a hundred and forty laps the standing was: Logsdon, Wilton, Olson, Hart, Stein, Walsh, with Monroe next and behind him the ham and egg drivers. Three full laps, seven and a half miles, separated Rex from the leader. With sixty laps of the race left, that meant he must lap Logsdon three times to win the race.

At a hundred and eighty laps, with only twenty laps left to go, he had lapped the leader twice. Logsdon had been quiescent during this time, holding evenly to his ninety-five-mile-an-hour speed. Monroe knew the leader's mental processes, for he had often been in the same place. Ninety-five miles was a safe gait, and so long as the danger was not imminent it would be foolish for Logsdon to risk greater speed.

At a hundred and ninety laps Rex had eaten heavily into the one lap that separated him from Logsdon. He was running third now. A half mile ahead of him was Wilton, the second man, while a mile ahead of Wilton was the leader. The smell of battle was in Monroe's nostrils. He held his accelerator down longer on the turns. At times his speed on the straightaways went to a hundred and sixteen miles an hour. He thanked his stars that Quiller had made such a sturdy car.

Amid the cheers of the thousands of spectators at the starting line, Monroe moved up beyond Wilton, and thus went into second place. To do this he had increased his speed to a dangerous point in going into the south turn. The car swung perilously, first to the right, then to the left. There were gasps of horror from the stands. Just as the intrepid driver got his mount under control and was congratulating himself that he had done so, the car struck a pool of oil. So quickly that the eye could scarcely follow its gyrations, it swung completely around, sliding to the inner edge of the track as it did so. Then, as if ashamed of the terror it had struck to the hearts of the watchers, it moved serenely on down the track, as though it had been intending to do that very thing. The minute Monroe found it pointing right end forward he stepped on the throttle. Fortunately, there was no car immediately behind him when he started his mad whirl, and so little forward momentum did he lose that none had come up to him when he gathered up his reduced speed and went ahead. Thereafter he watched his speed going into the turn where the oil pool lay.

Ten laps to go!

Logsdon roared along almost a mile ahead. Rex looked at his tachometer, the little dial that registered his engine speed. But he failed to heed the warning its 4800 revolutions conveyed to him.

Five laps to go!

Logsdon's speed had mounted to close to a hundred miles an hour and he was less than an eighth of a mile ahead of his pursuer. Rex looked at his tires. The left front one was beginning to wear thin. It might last or it might go at any minute. Yet if he should stop for a change the race would be lost.

Three laps to go!

Logsdon's pit was urging him to fresh endeavor. Monroe still came on.

Two laps to go!

Logsdon had his foot down all the way now, and he was still two hundred yards ahead.

One lap to go!

Again Rex thought of his left front tire. If he slowed down and took no chances he had second place won by two miles. If he didn't slow down he might wreck his car and not finish. Races were not won by being overcautious. Came the thought of the three behind his pit. The grandstands were a mass of weaving, shouting thrill-mad people. It was still anybody's race. Monroe shot into the south turn with undiminished speed. He held his steering wheel with a grip of steel. Would the tires withstand the sandpapering effect of the skidding on the turns which his speed would cause? He didn't know. . . . He was through the first corner! . . . On the short straightaway which formed the middle of the long turn! . . . His tires still held! . . . As he shot into the first corner of the north turn and the last one of the race, Logsdon was only a hundred yards ahead of him. Would his tires hold? . . . The second corner! . . . Through the corner and into the straightaway, the home stretch. Was it only fancy that his car was listing slightly to the left front end? . . . Logsdon was a bare fifty yards in the lead.

An eighth of a mile to go!

Jealous of every inch traveled, Monroe hurled his car over just far enough to clear Logsdon's car safely as they thundered down the home stretch. Now his radiator was even with Logsdon's rear wheel. . . . Now it was creeping past the wheel. . . . Monroe himself was now even with the other driver. He could almost have reached out and touched Logsdon on the arm. The finish line was a hundred yards ahead. . . . Fifty yards. . . . Together they roared down toward it. It was still anybody's race. . . . Ten yards. . . . To the spectators it looked like a dead heat.

The checkered flag flashed from the suspension bridge. The spectators might not have been sure, but Rex knew it had flashed for him first and for Logsdon afterward. He held up his hand. He took his foot from the accelerator and slid easily into the south turn. He was slowing down, content to jog around the track to stop at the finish line to get the verdict. He was still holding his steering wheel in a grip of steel. . . . He stopped and heard the judges award him first place. . . . His mind was on the three behind his pit.

The drag on his left front tire was persistent as he stopped in front of the pit and climbed out of his car. He pushed the photographers and newspaper men aside and climbed the rear pit wall and rushed over to the barbed wire fence. But before he reached the fence the three had jumped over it and were rushing to him. He held out his hands. There were no words spoken. His face was grimy with the dirt of the track, except the clean spots around his eyes which had been protected by his goggles. And from the two clean spots drops of something strangely like water trickled.

you couldn't lend me your barrow for half an hour? The wheel's off mine."

Mr. Quince hesitated and then favored him with a glance intended to remind him of his scurvy behavior three days before.

"You can have it," he said at last, rising.

Mr. Hogg pinched his friend in his excitement, and both watched Mr. Quince with bated breath as he took long, slow strides toward the tool shed. He tried the door and then went into the house, and even before his reappearance both gentlemen knew only too well what was about to happen. Red was all too poor a word to apply to Mr. Rose's countenance as the shoemaker came toward them, feeling in his waistcoat with hooked fingers and thumb, while Mr. Hogg's expressive features were twisted into an appearance of rosy appreciation.

"Did you want the barrow very particular?" inquired the shoemaker in a regretful voice.

"Very particular," said Mr. Hogg.

Mr. Quince went through the performance of feeling in all his pockets, and then stood meditatively rubbing his chin.

"The door's locked," he said, slowly, "and what I've done with that there key—"

"You open that door," vociferated Mr. Rose, "else I'll break it in. You've got my daughter in that shed and I'm going to have her out."

"Your daughter?" said Mr. Quince, with an air of faint surprise. "What should she be doing in my shed?"

"You let her out," stormed Mr. Rose trying to push past him.

"Don't trespass on my premises," said Lawyer Quince, interposing his long, gaunt frame. "If you want that door opened you'll have to wait till my boy Ned comes home. I expect he knows where to find the key."

Mr. Rose's hands fell limply by his side and his tongue, turning prudish, refused its office. He turned and stared at Mr. Hogg in silent consternation.

"Never known him to be beaten yet," said that admiring weather-cock.

"Ned's been away three days," said the shoemaker, "but I expect him home soon."

Mr. Rose made a strange noise in his throat and then, accepting his defeat, set off at a rapid pace in the direction of home. In a marvellously short space of time, considering his age and figure, he was seen returning with Ned Quince, flushed and dishevelled, walking by his side.

"Here he is," said the farmer. "Now where's that key?"

Lawyer Quince took his son by the arm and led him into the house, whence they almost immediately emerged with Ned waving the key.

"I thought it wasn't far," said the sapient Mr. Hogg.

Ned put the key in the lock and flinging the door open revealed Celia Rose, blinking and confused in the sudden sunshine. She drew back as she saw her father and began to cry with considerable fervor.

"How did you get in that shed, miss?" demanded her parent, stamping.

"I went there," she sobbed. "I didn't want to go away."

"Well, you'd better stay there," shouted the overwrought Mr. Rose. "I've done with you. A girl that 'ud turn against her own father I—I—"

He drove his right fist into his left palm and stamped out into the road. Lawyer Quince and Mr. Hogg, after a moment's hesitation, followed.

"The laugh's agin you, farmer," said the latter gentleman, taking his arm.

Mr. Rose shook him off.

"Better make the best of it," continued the peacemaker.

"She's a girl to be proud of," said Lawyer Quince, keeping pace with the farmer on the other side. "She's got a head that's worth yours and mine put together, with Hogg's thrown in as a little makeweight."

"And here's the White Swan," said Mr. Hogg, who had a hazy idea of a compliment, "and all of us as dry as a bone. Why not all go in and have a glass to shut folks' mouths?"

"And cry quits," said the shoemaker.

"And let bygones be bygones," said Mr. Hogg, taking the farmer's arm again.

Mr. Rose stopped and shook his head obstinately, and then, under the skillful pilotage of Mr. Hogg, was steered in the direction of the hospitable doors of the White Swan. He made a last bid for liberty on the step and then disappeared inside. Lawyer Quince brought up the rear.

THE SPECTRE OF THE TRACK

same for him, even if he hasn't asked us?"

"If I had $12,000, I'd—I'd—well, it's hard to tell what I'd do," Tommy told her.

"That sure is a funny joke, Jane," Bob Manson drawled. "The sheriff's just about ready to read the papers over our coal yard."

"We've got to get it!" the girl insisted.

"'We've.' Where do you get that 'we've' stuff?" Tommy had the floor again.

"Twelve thousand, twelve thousand," Bob Manson mumbled, and then, as if his mind had become adjusted to the demand, he continued: "How much can you get together, Tommy?"

"It's not how much I can get, it's how much I've got to get. We've got to rope and hog tie six thousand berries apiece, Bob, by tomorrow night. Six thousand beans. If I ever had that much money I'd buy the Statehouse or something!"

"No worse shape than me. We just bought a loading crane for our yards and sunk fifteen thousand in other equipment. We're in the hole proper. But I'll figure my six thousand some way."

"You're forgetting me!" There was an angry gleam in Jane's eyes.

"We'll let you buy the motometer, Jane, that's what we'll do," Tommy answered.

"You'll not do anything of the kind!"

"All right, stubborn. How much kale you got?"

"Twenty-five hundred and fifty dollars."

"Laid away for your wedding and the like?" Tommy continued.

"It's my wedding, Tommy."

"All right, have it your way—women always do! Your twenty-five hundred is in. You can keep the even fifty. We only need ninety-five hundred now. That's forty-seven hundred and fifty apiece. Easy. Shake a leg, Bob. Beg, borrow, raise a check, or steal. I'll look for yours tomorrow."

"You two are wonderful—just wonderful!"

"You're the first girl that ever told me that," Tommy rejoined, "and it puts power in me good right arm. These two highwaymen will get the jack." Then he grew serious. "But he must not hear a word. He'd gum the works and refuse to take the car. You just keep on actin' sad and I'll fix the rest. Nobody but Quiller needs to know. I'll slip the dope to that old joy killer and make him agree to tell Rex he's seen a vision and changed his mind."

Instead of going home, Tommy talked to Bob on the sidewalk in front of the Corrigan home for a few minutes. Then he went downtown. Passing the portals of an innocent-appearing clean chop suey parlor, he went to the rear, through the kitchen, and up a narrow stairway. It sometimes pays to be a popular cigar salesman. At the top of a flight of stairs Tommy paused and tapped three times, waiting an instant and tapped twice in quick succession. After which he waited again, knowing that he was being given the once over by some one not visible to him. The door finally opened and he walked down another dark hallway through another door into a well-lighted and richly furnished room, heavy with cigar smoke. On the wall was a huge board with the odds on the different drivers in the race. At the bottom of the list was Rex Monroe's name, with a blank where the car's name should have appeared, and the odds of fifteen to one. Before the driver's name was an asterisk with the notation that all bets were off on drivers not having cars the evening before the race. Around the tables in the room one could engage in any game of chance he cared to buck. Walking to a desk in the corner, Tommy stopped before the man sitting there.

"I got something soft for you Jim. Want to take a ride on a sure thing?"

"Name it, Tommy."

"I'm makin' up a pool to buy a car for Monroe. I got a hunch that he'll finish well up. Got an option on one of Quiller's wagons for twelve thousand. I can get Monroe to drive for the pool on a fifty-fifty basis for the rest of the year, beginnin' with the International Sweepstakes."

The gambler laughed. "Put your money on something live, Tommy. I don't mind taking a chance, but I want to have something in my favor. Did you read the board? Fifteen to one that he didn't finish first. He's not good enough to get a car, even."

"Did you ever know me to welch?" Tommy bristled.

"That's different. Now, if you want to borrow a thousand or so I'll let you have it on your word. But when it comes to taking your word on an investment, I'm not at home."

"Suppose Rex slams his chariot across in first place? Twenty thousand bucks. Suppose he gets another tenner for usin' this or that battery and this or that ignition, and this or that tire? Thirty thousand berries. We give Rex fifteen thousand, we pay for the car, it's ours, and we make three thousand clear, not to mention what we're goin' to make on the rest of the races."

"This state's got a blue sky law, Tommy. The bulls will get you if you don't watch out."

"Rex'll make the grade."

The gambler shook his head.

"All right. I don't want to borrow a thousand. I've got about that much. I want $3750."

The gambler smiled. He had gambled on his skill in handling cards time without number. Here was a chap gambling on his faith in his friend. It appealed to Jim Woods. Besides, he knew that if the young Irishman before him agreed to do a thing it would be done.

"I'll let you have the money, Tommy. And I'm so sure that your friend Monroe won't win that I'll take a hundred of yours at fifteen to one that he doesn't finish in the first five."

"Make that twenty to one on first place and I'll take it," Tommy promptly came back. "I don't want to rob you."

"Check," the gambler answered. "Now, do you know how long it will take you to pay back that $3750 at $25 a week?"

"We won't discuss minor details, Jim. Write me a check, and I'll give you my note for it—my note that isn't worth a dime at the bank."

"It's worth its face to me, boy."

Bob Manson approached his business partner the first thing the next morning. "Say, Frank, we stand to make about $16,000 this year if things go right, don't we?"

"Just about."

"I know you've got some loose money in the bank. I need $4750. If you let me have it I'll pay you back in a week, 10 per cent interest. If I don't pay you back in a week I'll pay you an even $6000 at the end of the year."

"You better let the women alone, Bob," his partner said. "But you may have the money on your own terms."

By noon the $12,000 was in Harry Quiller's hands.

Still led by the will-o'-the-wisp of hope, Rex went out to the speedway that morning. Passing Quiller's garage, he gave the door a wide berth, but Quiller himself was standing outside as though on the lookout for some one. As soon as he saw Rex he called him over to one side. "I've been thinking things over, Rex, and I've come to the conclusion that you can take No. 8. She's as good as any in the lot, and she'll run till marks reach par. You've got a day to look her over, but you'll find her ready to step right now."

"You don't mean it, Harry! Honest!" The grin with which the discredited driver enforced his exclamation gave Quiller as much mental anquish as it did physical pain, which was not a little.

"That's all right, Rex. Better get on the job."

For just an instant the whole speedway danced weirdly before Rex Monroe's eyes. Then his emotion passed and he walked over to No. 8.

The news spread like gossip at an aid society meeting. Quiller was commiserated by the knowing ones, while a few thought it mighty white of him to throw away a chance at the prize money just because he had known Monroe for a long time.

Rex reported at once to the officials for his physical examination, and arranged to qualify his car immediately. Since qualifying speed need only be an average of eighty miles an hour for four laps he did this at once. After which he drove his car back into its garage, locked the door and went downtown.

It was dark, when he reached his hotel. He reached for the telephone. Jane should be the first to hear of his good fortune. It seemed an interminable time before he could get her on the phone. "I've got a car, Janie. Going to drive one of Quiller's straight eights. Best car on the track. Quiller has it tuned to the minute, and I won't have much work to do. Everything is all right now, and I'm coming out tonight to tell you all about it."

"Listen, boy. You mustn't come out here tonight. You get right into a warm shower, eat your dinner, and go right to bed. You must have the rest, Rex. Will you do that for me, and will you understand why I wish you to do it? You must be at your best when you race. I knew you'd get a car—I knew you would!"

Rex Monroe heard the sob that followed the remark.

"What's the matter, Janie? I'm coming out right now."

"No—you get some rest. I'm crying, but I'm just crying for joy, Rex."

Rex took a bath, ate, and an hour thereafter was sound asleep.

At 6 o'clock next morning Tommy Canfield was busy shining up the car which he used for business six days a week and for pleasure the seventh. At 7:30 he picked up Bob Manson, and a few minutes later they had stopped for Jane. They were old time race goers, and they knew the value of an early start in order to escape the congestion of the road. At 8 o'clock they were entering the speedway grounds. Ten minutes later they drove the nose of Tommy's car into reserved parking space No. 18, directly behind Rex Monroe's pit.

Rex was busy, but as soon as he saw them drive up he hurried over to the barbed wire fence that separated the pit inclosure from the parking space.

"Got a hundred bucks on you, old timer, to finish first," Tommy yelled as he came up.

"How's the Big Three?" Rex asked as he reached the barricade and climbed over it. He grasped Jane's hand as he spoke.

"We'll be here rooting for you every minute, Rex." Jane squeezed his hand as she spoke.

"You keep your mind on the job, Rex, and you'll beat the jinx. It's the same old mental hazard we met up with at the pond between Eight and Nine. Keep your eyes on the ball and swing on it and you've put her clear over the water." Bob put his hand on Rex's shoulder.

"It was mighty fine of Quiller to give me the wheel of one of his cars, and with pals like you three I'm the luckiest driver on the track. A fellow just has to win . . . I've got to be going. Got several little things to do. . . . See you right after the race," Rex said, as he climbed back over the fence.

"Rex, where is that rabbit's foot I gave you?" Jane called after him.

He came back and fished it out of his shirt pocket. "I'll carry the rabbit's foot, but it's the three of you that will help me get through," he said simply.

When the cars were ordered into their positions at the starting line they lined up in tiers of three, five yards apart, the position depending on the time made in the qualification trials. Rex's thoughts harked back to other days as he took his place in the last row a quarter of a mile behind the leaders.

The five minute bomb burst. The drivers began getting into their cars, the track was cleared of technical men, car owners, newspaper men, and photographers. Suddenly there was a commotion at the gate leading on to the track and a man with a newspaper badge on his coat ran out on the track. Officials yelled at him, but he didn't hesitate. He went down the long line of cars until he came to Monroe.

"You've got about three minutes, Rex," he spoke hurriedly. "I just left Quiller and he tells me that Tommy Canfield, Bob Manson and Jane Corrigan bought this car for you. I——"

"Bought this car? It's Quiller's. He——"

"That's bunk. Quiller told me differently. He thought I wouldn't have a chance to see you. Great story, Rex. Friends buy car for you when all the world turns you down. Got faith you'll come back. I've got the exclusive on it. Quiller won't tell any one else. Got anything to say?"

Used to handling emergencies on the track, Rex was stunned by what he had heard. The newspaper man's insistence was as a voice afar off. . . . They had done this for him!

"You got two minutes, Rex, and I'll get thrown off the track in a second. The greatest story ever broke on this track. My God, man, don't sit there like a dummy!"

Rex Monroe's voice was husky. "I don't know what to say."

"That's a hell of an exclusive story!" the newspaper man roared, as a speedway guard pulled him off the track.

Monroe hardly heard or saw the one-minute bomb give its notice. His gaze wandered over the sight before him. Twenty-seven sleek racing cars, waiting for the starting bomb. It was a sight once seen never forgotten. Every color in the rainbow had been drawn on to furnish coats for the cars. Here one of solid white, there one of belligerent red, another of soft blue, a gray one, a yellow one, a sinister one of all black, another of gold, another of green, and varieties in between. It was the first year of the single seater and to Rex the cars seemed tiny and frail beside those of years. But he knew that look belied actuality. There they stood, the cough of their exhausts so soft that it was audible only to a few rods in the grandstands near-by. A blue haze hung above the cars, with the pungent odor of burned castor oil ascending like incense to the noses of the worshipers of the god of speed. On the inside of the track the pacing car stood, its driver waiting for the word from the starter, who stood on the suspension bridge directly above the starting wire.

The starting bomb! The man on the bridge waved to the pacing car driver. The pacing car moved slowly away. Keeping their lines unbroken, the contestants moved after it. Past the grandstands the cavalcade went, gradually increasing its speed as deafening applause greeted its advent around the track. Through the south turn, down the back stretch, into the north turn, out into the front stretch. The speed of the pacing car was well over seventy miles an hour. Still the racing cars maintained their appointed places in order behind the leader. Now, as they approached the starting line, the air was filled with a drumming and moaning as of an oncoming storm. The cars swept closer and what had first been a sullen rumble to the spectators in the stands separated into the staccato of machine-gun fire. As the first line of cars reached the starting tape the pacing car drew to one side and the red flag of the starter on the bridge described a wide arc. The moaning of the oncoming storm, the staccato of machine guns vanished into thin air, and in their stead was the roar of twenty-seven thoroughbred racing cars, masses of steel hurtling through space, eager drivers with foot now jammed hard on the accelerator, all restraint removed as they shot toward the south turn, a scant eighth of a mile away. The race had begun!

Rex's mind was in a tumult as he shot down the track. He recalled how Quiller had turned a deaf ear, and then had a change of heart. That should have been a warning that something was wrong, for he knew Quiller as a man of positive opinion. Driving instinctively, and lost in his ponderings, Rex was brought back to earth by the twitching of his throttle foot. He was coming out of the north turn at the smashup spot. His foot jerked off the accelerator. He felt his car speed drop. He thrust his foot eagerly forward, but it refused to do his bidding. The perspiration was pouring from him in a stream. Again he put his will into action, and the foot obeyed. But he had lost valuable distance in the struggle. As lap succeeded lap the spector persisted. He was averaging less than ninety miles an hour, though his speed on the back stretch was well over a hundred and twelve. Ahead of him the leaders were piling up distance at an average of ninety-eight miles an hour. As lap after lap was reeled off the leaders continued to maintain their advantage.

"Rex is going into his hundredth lap—the one in which Kelly was killed." Jane Corrigan twisted her program nervously.

"I got a hunch. We'll not think of anything but Rex this lap, and hope he'll keep his foot down," Bob Manson told the other two.

"Been doin' it all the time," Tommy said.

"Try it harder than ever," Jane implored.

. . . .

Rex's mind was full of the sacrifice his friends had made for him. He shifted in his narrow seat as he went through the north turn and drew near the fateful spot. He must not permit the sacrifice to be in vain. He must justify their faith! Then came thoughts of Kelly. The accident might have befallen any one. It was not carelessness on his part. It was the fault of the wheel maker, a fault that the driver could not guard against. If Kelly could only know how his friends had stood by him, if he only could. . . . Once again, as in the other laps, Rex's hands grew

Guide to the Province of Quebec

As Some Americans See It

BY STEPHEN LEACOCK

I traveled the other day from New York to Montreal, where I live, in the pleasant company of some Americans coming to the province of Quebec for a brief vacation. "I like the altitude," said one. "The air in the Laurentians," said another, "is wonderful." "What I specially like," said the third, "is the charm of the old French civilization."

What they said was true, but it seemed to leave out something. They had with them a little GUIDE BOOK to the Province of Quebec. But that, too, seemed to leave out something. So I have compiled a new one, as follows.

THE Province of Quebec, licensed to sell beer and wine, has an area of 706,000 square miles. Its magnificent extent reaches from the border of New York State to the shore of the Frozen Seas. The most northerly license is that at Oopchoopchik in Labrador. But it is not necessary to travel so far as that.

The great glory of the province is the broad stream of the River St. Lawrence. On its noble bosom ply the magnificent passenger steamers of the Canada Steamship Company, the bars on which usually open at 7 o'clock. There is no finer sight for the American tourist than to sit on the forward deck (the bar deck) of one of these palatial vessels and to watch the magnificent panorama of historic scenery which is unfolded to the eye as the ascent of the river is made.

Here on our right hand as we come up from the sea the magnificent stream of the Saguenay pours its foaming waters through the gateway of frowning rock as it joins the St. Lawrence. Clinging to the very crest of the rock, like an eagle upon its nest, is a tiny hotel, licensed to sell wine, beer and other malt liquors.

What the Eye Commands

ASCENDING the river further, we pass the famous falls of the Montmorenci, from which the soda water is made. Pouring over the cliff in a cascade over 200 feet high, the water is churned into soda at the foot. Nothing is needed but to mix with this soda a small quantity—or a large—of the Scotch whisky, freely imported for private orders under the laws of the province. The result is a delicious beverage, sparkling and refreshing, which may be placed beside us on a little table on the deck, while we smoke our Havana cigar, with one foot up on a camp stool.

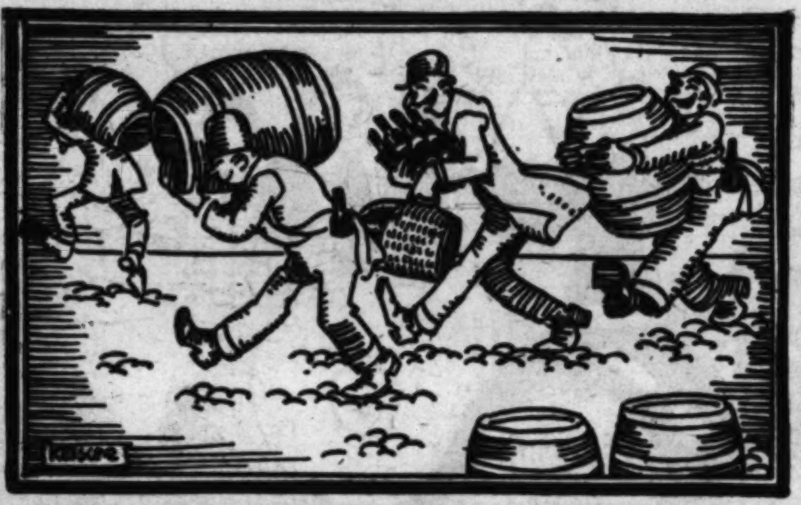
Our attention is next turned—though not completely—to the historic and picturesque Island of Orleans. Here are the quaint villages, the little spires, and the stone houses of the old French civilization, unchanged since its first foundation under Louis XIV. Through our field glasses we can see the thrifty French Canadian farmer busily engaged in distilling whisky blanc, or white whisky made from wheat.

In front of us now rises the impressive outline of the Quebec Bridge, its huge span crossing the river from summit to summit, and there before us there appears the gray old city of Quebec, climbing its rocky stronghold, the sentinel of New France. Our eye detects at once the dominating outline of the Chateau Frontenac Hotel, the bar of which commands a splendid view of the river. Here lie the great ocean steamers of the Canadian Pacific Railway. They do not draw as much water as the steamers of the White Star and the Cunard lines that enter New York harbor. But they do not need to. They have advantages of their own.

We are now so close in that we are right beside one of these leviathans of the deep and can hear one of the white-coated stewards cracking ice. As we pass by another of these ocean greyhounds, we catch a glimpse through the windows of the smoking-room of ale being sold for eightpence a bottle.

Parliament and Percentage

THE ancient City of Quebec well repays our brief visit of inspection. Here is the gateway where brave Gen. Montgomery met his death on the wild December night when he tried to storm the city gates. Here is the entrance to the Hotel St. Louis. Here is the famous Convent of the Ursalines where Montcalm died. Here is the Hotel du Canada.



No prescriptions must be filled out for more than a barrelful at a time.

Our stay in the mother city of America is all too short. We would fain climb the heights to reach the broad plateau or Plain of Abraham, where the destiny of America was settled at a blow. There are no licenses now anywhere near the Plain of Abraham.

If our time allows we drop in a moment to visit the splendid building where the Parliament of the Province of Quebec is in session. Here the Lieutenant-Governor sits enthroned, the direct representative of the King. Around him are the ministers of the Crown leaning over his chair. There is a strange charm in listening to courteous debate which is going on, all of it, we note with unreasonable surprise, conducted in French. The distinguished Premier of the province is speaking. We bend our ear to listen, understanding as best we can. We gather that the Prime Minister is speaking, gravely and earnestly, on the question of the percentage of alcohol in the beverages of the province. Certain members of the opposition have urged that it be raised from 100 to 150. Sir Lomer does not see his way to do this. But he assures the house that if anyone will show him how to do it, he will do it.

The ancient city of Quebec has her own proud way of dealing with the modern liquor problem. She gives no licenses but sells liquor only through the medical profession, and then only to those who need it. As we descend the slope from the legislature we pass the gay little street of the doctors with its laughing crowd of sick people around each door. The law is very strict, it appears. No prescriptions must be filled out for more than a barrelful at a time. The enforcement of this law is aided by a vigorous public opinion in its favor.

We are back again upon our comfortable steamer. We are again ascending the river on our way to the metropolis of Montreal. The bar, which was closed during our absence on shore, is now open again. It is a strict rule of the Canada Steamship Company that when nobody wants a drink the bar is closed.

The scenery has changed now. On either side of the river, we pass from time to time the quaint little villages of French Canada, each with its tall church spires and its neat hotel, licensed to sell beer and wine. From time to time larger towns rise upon the bank. Here is Three Rivers with its vast piles of lumber, its tall smoke stacks and its eighteen licenses.

The Perils of the Wilds

IN THE country to the north, we can see the dim outline of the Laurentian Mountains—a vast territory of lake and mountain, forest and stream, an ideal hunting ground, the paradise of the sportsman. Some of our passengers have visited the Laurentians and as we sit about the deck in a circle they exchange stories of their adventures. One tells us how he was once moose hunting beyond the forks of the Batikan and lost his flask. Another tells a tale of how he and two companions got separated from their party over the divide in the wilderness near Lake Mistassini and for four days had only the two bottles of whisky among three of them. Stories such as these, though told lightly and casually, give one a very real idea of the peculiar hardships and dangers of the hunter's life in the Laurentians.

But our steamboat journey is at an end. Our boat is steaming into the river harbor of Montreal, crowded with shipping. Before us lies the great metropolis framed against the background of its Royal Mountain. Our landing fills us with wonder and delight. On every side are objects of interest. Here in the foreground of the picture is the great brewery of the Molsons; we can see the thin steam rising from its covered top in a dainty cloud in the clear air. There is something exquisite in the sight that recalls the canvas of a Turner or a Correggio or the skyline of Milwaukee as she used to be.

We Enter an Oasis

IN THE upper town, all is animation, on every side are evidences of industrial prosperity. It is the noon hour and we can see that even the laborer on the street has his can of beer beside him as he eats his dinner.

Ah! Here is the Ritz Carlton Hotel, our destination. Good Mr. Quick is standing at the door to welcome us. His hotel is full to the roof and has been since January 16, 1920, but Mr. Quick can always find room for one more. We enter. We sink into the luxurious wicker chairs of the Palm Room where a Czecho-Slovak orchestra (Mr. Quick called it Hungarian before the war) is playing Jugo-Slav music. We order a quart of champagne each and send for a bundle of naturalization papers and a fountain pen. We shall never go home.

PRETTY FRENCH ACTRESS GIVES SPHINX TRIBUTE

THE French newspapers have all given the details of Cecile Sorel's recent vacation in Egypt. The noted French actress returned with a soul crowded with emotions and a portfolio full of photographs, in one of which she is shown posing on the breast of the Sphinx. And now Mlle. Sorel has confided to Le Figaro what she said to the Sphinx. These are her words:

"This Sphinx, crouched in the sands, lifting to heaven its sublime smile and steady gaze—does it not attain the height of expression which our art teaches us—immobility, introspection mysterious and profound, self-possession, impassiveness of body ironically dominating all the troubles of the spirit?

"Truly thou dost teach the greatest lesson, O Sphinx, To accept all life, as thou dost, with an ironical smile is to gain the mastery of oneself and of others.

"Now do I understand why thou were calling me, obsessing me. I accept with fervor thy lesson of truth; it illuminates me and radiates from me like a sun. I will obey thee.

"Silence is the sum total of the emotions. Leonardo da Vinci expressed this in his 'Joconde,' Michelangelo in his 'Pensur,' and, in our day, in my own realm of the arts, Lucien Guitry dominates by his striking immobilities, Chaliapin rises to heights of grandeur in the 'silences' of his voice, Duse was a genius in tragic concentration and finally the Japanese, Sessue Hayakawa, condenses in his oblique gaze a whole inner tumult too great for expression.

"I proclaim them all thy disciples, god of the desert, and I understand thy secret. Sphinx, over our masters thou art the master!"

Squatters in the Oil Fields

A figure in the drama of oil is the squatter, who moves in and proceeds by primitive methods to undertake development of what is not his own. Sometimes these squatters get well started. They had one in operation on the Teapot Dome when the Sinclair interests took charge.

It was necessary to send a company of Marines across the country to drive them off. According to one view in the oil trade these men were not squatters, but had settlers' rights under State laws passed years ago. In any event they lost their claims at the point of the gun.

Claim-jumping is a familiar part of the oil drama, just as it used to be in the days of the gold rush. Hardly a big field has been opened without a war over claims. More than one big company has been accused of employing bullies to drive off early comers. Murder is not an uncommon accompaniment of the struggle.—[James C. Young in the New York Times.

WHEN YOU GIVE AN AMATEUR PLAY

WHEN I went to see Mary Boland in "The Torch Bearers," a satire on amateur theatricals, I could but feel that there were a good many pointers I might have been able to give them; not that the play needed it as it was a great success and the public was very glad to get a laugh at the picture of the amateur imbued with the desire to be an actress. The word "amateur" to the professional seems to mean something more to be pitied than scorned and never to be taken seriously. Perhaps the only amateur organization which is thought of at all seriously is the Comedy Club and I must confess that in my amateur years I never took part in any of its productions, nor have I ever seen any of them, but I am told that some of them are very good.

In my quite broad experience with ematteurs I am convinced that there is very often much talent among them.

The real difference between the amateurs and professionals is in their attitude of mind toward their work and in the attitude of mind of all others toward them.

One of the things that used to irritate me beyond words was the certain knowledge that I could never receive a genuine and honest criticism. The papers will always eulogize an amateur performance and your friends (to your face at least) tell you how very remarkable you are.

The average rehearsal of an amateur performance is pretty much a scene of bedlam. I can never forget the first big review put on by the Junior League of New York, in which I should say, roughly, there were at least 200 participants. Fortunately we had a marvelous director at whom I used to look in amazement and astonishment.

Must Have Patience

THE director of an amateur theatrical needs not only to have the usual qualities demanded in a director but he must have amazing patience and power to compete with handicaps never met by the director of the profession.

In this case the director was a woman. I don't think that, with the possible exception of the dress rehearsal, she ever had a full attendance, nor could she get the attention of many of the participants who were there. Most amateurs look upon a rehearsal as a possibly amusing afternoon and a chance of meeting their friends and chatting, all of which is very nice but does not help the performance. Consequntly in thinking of giving an amateur show the first and all-important question is the coach.

When one considers the difficulty that a professional company has in achieving a smooth-running opening night, prior to which all the people must not only come to rehearsal but must be punctual, one wonders how success is possible in producing an amateur performance. Yet they are produced and at times are extremely good —"for amateurs," I suppose I must add.

To return again for a moment to the first Junior League review (I choose this because it was the first time that a production of such size had ever been attempted by amateurs,) I can remember now the dress rehearsal; I can remember the terrific chaos, the seeming indefiniteness on the part of many of the people as to what they were going to do and, as it looked to me, the impossibility of attempting to get any sort of performance that night. Yet the performance was not only given but was amazingly good and a great success.

The major amount of responsibility for an amateur performance rests on the coach. Consequently if I were advising any organization on the subject of giving an amateur performance the first thing I would say would be:

"Whatever else you may economize on, do not economize on your coach. Get a profesional—and a good one."

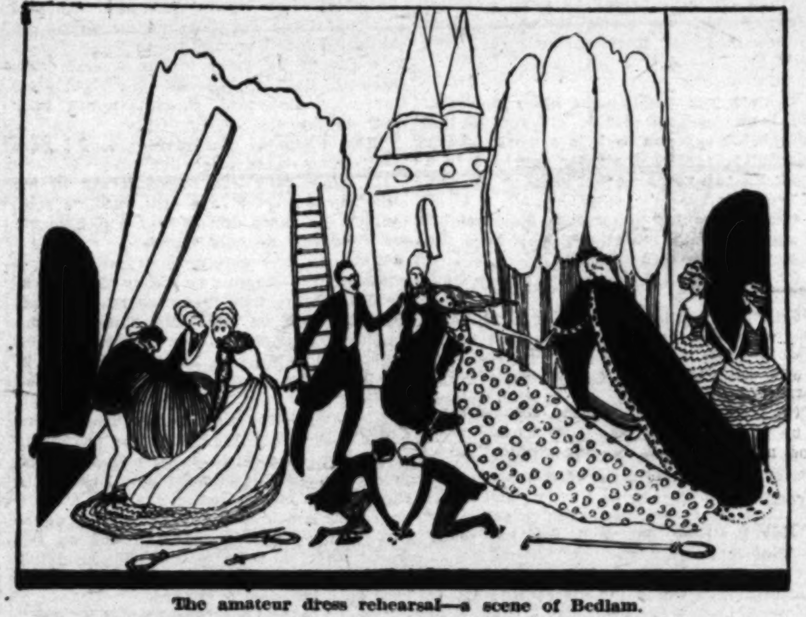
It is of paramount importance to the success of the performance. I will give further details on this subject in my next article.

No Amateur Coaching

IF YOU are contemplating amateur theatricals, economize on anything but the coach. Don't ever have an amateur to coach.

No matter how good a dancer an amateur may be, for instance, it is rare to find one who would know how to impart that knowledge to others. A girl or woman with no experience in handling people would have a difficult, not to say impossible, task confronting her.

The coach well trained in her work has difficulty achieving any sort of discipline or sense of responsibility when dealing with amateurs. I [illegible]ine the chaos if another amateur were [illegible] the head. The impression I received during my amateur days was that many amateurs seemed to feel that they were conferring a favor by attending rehearsals at all and that in consequence they were perfectly at liberty to joke and laugh, pay little or no attention to the words of the coach and generally make it as difficult for the coach, themselves and others, as possible. If things do not go right at the performance, however, who is blamed? The long-suffering coach!



The amateur dress rehearsal—a scene of Bedlam.

I once played the lead in a play called "The Pantomime Rehearsal." It was given for some charity and Ferdinand Gottschall; (a professional) played in it and directed it. In brief, the story was the rehearsal of a play done by amateurs and I played the leading miscreant and bad behaver! It is quite an amusing little one-act play and certainly true to life. I found the part quite easy to play, subconsciously aided I suppose.

In addition to achieving discipline through tact and force of personality, the coach must be very careful never to hurt anyone's feelings (it is amazing how quickly the feelings of amateurs can be hurt!) She must quickly size up her material almost without their knowing it and use everything to the best advantage. She must insist on absolutely no interference from mothers, members of committees, etc., and she must try at the beginning to get the respect and liking of the participants. They have not much sense of duty generally, but if they like the coach and at the same time are a little afraid of her they and she will accomplish much more.

Difficult Feats

SOMETIMES quite difficult feats are demanded of amateurs. We often read in the paper of someone having to step into another person's part at a few hours' notice and I have seen the same thing happen in amateur theatricals. I can remember it happening to others but, being only human, the two instances that stand out in my mind are when it happened to me.

The first time was in a Junior League performance when a few days before the performance was to take a place a young married woman who had been rehearsing a quite difficult Oriental dance for some weeks was thrown into mourning. The coach called me on the telephone and I started rehearsing it at midnight that night.

The other time was much more trying. On leaving the dress rehearsal at 6 (the performance starting at 8:30) Carol Harriman, one of twelve in a Scotch reel, fell downstairs and sprained her ankle. The coach had gone and the bagpiper (it was to be danced to a bag-pipe) also, but I was informed I must take her place. One of the other members of the reel showed me the steps and I went through them once with him. I then went home, did what I could to adapt her costume to me, returned to the hotel and went through the steps once with the bag-pipe. I am glad to say the reel took place before my prearranged dance, for I am quite sure the horror of waiting for the Scotch reel would have prevented my getting through the other. I got through it somehow, wildly, furtively watching my companions (a Scotch reel has so many steps quickly done) and at least did not disgrace myself though beyond that I have no real idea how I acquitted myself—naturally everyone was very kind. It was a nerve-racking experience, however, and I was glad then (if never before or since) that I was being judged as an amateur.

Different Forms

ENTERTAINMENTS for charity may take many different forms. Perhaps it would not be amiss to tell of a few that have been done with success in and around New York.

There are always the amateur theatricals. Then there are performances given by professionals but organized and run by amateurs, in addition to which there are rummage sales, fairs, costume balls, fashion shows, bridge or mah jongg parties, etc.

A very good way of raising money, one which is quite frequently used, is to take over an entire performance of a popular play, concert or opera. Mrs. Kenneth O'Brien, for instance, took over one performance of "The Miracle" the other night, and the Navy Club takes one performance at the Metropolitan Operahouse every year.

This means paying so much for the theater and the artists, which entails quite a large financial responsibility on the part of the charity. Once some charity arranged for a good prize fight, and made I believe a large amount of money; and last year a rodeo was held on a private place on Long Island. In fact, anything that has a chance of proving popular is a good idea.

Naturally the initial expense should be well considered before starting. The criticism made of many charities is that so much is spent unnecessarily, or that the production is so expensive that little is realized for the charity.

Whether the actual performance is given by professionals or amateurs, a performance for charity has always approximately the same method of organization. There is generally a chairman at the head of the entertainment; she may not be the regular head of the organization, but is made the head organizer of the entertainment. She should form committees under her, naming the head of each committee (an immeasurably important detail) but leaving the choice of each committee to the respective heads. No one individual can possibly run an entire entertainment, and the proof of her efficiency will be her choice of officers. Naturally in the final analysis she is responsible, hence the importance to herself as well as to the charity of her choice of assistants.

The entertainment to be given naturally influences the number and types of committees, but almost all charity entertainments need the following: One to get the list of patronesses, one to make up the program, (which means getting the cover donated if possible, and getting as many shops as possible to advertise, which helps considerably financially;) one to sell the seats and boxes if it is a theatrical performance, or the tickets, boxes and supper tables if it is a ball; and one to get the artists if the entertainments is to be given by professionals.

If the performance is to be amateur and more or less of a revue, in other words a series of dances, it is a good plan to put one girl in charge of each dance or tableau. If the entertainment is to be a fair, then the chairman should decide what she is going to have in the way of booths and side shows and make one person responsible for each of them. This means signing up people to help sell, and persuading others to present you with all the goods for the booth.

Absent-Minded Barber

The barber on our block had a sad experience. A flapper came in to get her hair bobbed. There is money in the business, and he thought he might please her so much that she would bring in her mates. But after bobbing her hair he absent-mindedly started to lather her for a shave.—[Louisville-Courier Journal.

The Married Life of Helen and Warren

Warren Rages at Interruptions When He Brings Work Home From the Office

BY MABEL HERBERT URNER

Creator of "Helen and Warren" Characters

"GOT to work tonight," Warren flung a bulky brief case on the hall table.

"Oh, dear, not tonight," dismayed Helen, taking his dripping umbrella.

"Yes, and late, too," grimly, "Should've stayed at the office, but you put up such a howl if I don't come home."

"But we're playing bridge with the Daltons tonight!"

"We're doing nothing of the kind! Call 'em up and say I've got to work."

"Dear, she'll be furious," following him into his room. "She'll think——"

"Don't give a darn what she thinks. Got to work, I tell you. Hustle along dinner," slamming into the bathroom to wash up.

Reluctantly Helen went in to the library telephone. What excuse could she give Mrs. Dalton? What would justify this last-minute notice?

She was still standing at the telephone, her hand on the receiver, when Warren brisked out from the bathroom.

"Trying to cook up some lie, eh? Tell 'em I've got to work. That's a good enough excuse for anybody."

"If it were your friends, you'd go," flamingly. "But with anyone I like—you're always breaking engagements. And I have to make the excuses."

"Well, you don't have to make this one. Here," pushing her from the phone.

"No, wait, what're you going to say? You're always so abrupt. Let me ——"

"What's their number? Got it here?" turning through her red-leather list. "This blooming thing's so crossed out, you can't read it."

The number finally deciphered, he soon had Mrs. Dalton on the wire.

"Sorry, but I've got to work tonight. We'll have to call off that bridge . . . No, it'll take me most of the night—work I can't side-track . . . . She's well . . . Yes, I'll tell her."

"Oh, you were so curt," anxioused Helen. "What did she say? Did she seem hurt?"

"What's there to be hurt about?" irately. "Dinner ready?"

At the table he dispatched his food in moody absorption, and Helen, still incensed, made no effort to divert him.

His ruthless disregard of their engagements! Last week he refused to go to the Drakes' just because he was "darn tired." And now to cancel this bridge!

After dinner, puffing at a corpulent cigar, he strode into the library.

"Now, clear this off," glowering at the littered table.

"Why, aren't you going to work at the desk?"

"No elbow room. Here, take away all this junk. Wonder you wouldn't pitch out some of these old magazines? Jove, you hang on to things!"

"Wait, I'll pile them on one side. Where do you want to sit?"

"Want the whole table. Chuck 'em all off! Got any decent ink?" examining his fountain-pen. "Needs filling."

"Only what's there in the inkstand," Helen was clearing the table.

"Huh, thick with dust. Why don't you buy a quart of good writing-fluid? Punk light. One of these burnt out?" feeling under the silk-fringed shade. "Where's that 50-watt daylight bulb I brought home?"

"Dear, it makes such an ugly, cold bluish light."

"Now never mind the color. It don't have to flatter my phiz. I want a good strong light to work by."

"You said Mr. Curtis'd get open that broom closet," Susie was at the door. "I got to have the carpet-sweeper in the morning. Can he do it now?"

"Dear, the door's stuck—that paint. Only take a minute. Won't you?"

"No, I won't!" savagely. "My work's more important than your broom closet. What's the matter with the superintendent?"

"I hate to ask him to do these little things. And you always have to tip him."

"Trying to save a quarter, eh? Get me a pad to figure on. No, a bigger one. Why, the Sam Hill don't you buy some stationery? Never anything in this desk but a bunch of whiskered letters and senile ads!"

Warren, finally settled at his work, Helen took up the concluding installment of "Feverish Folly." A lurid, flapper serial, peppered with cocktails, petting parties, sprightly dialogue, and day-after-tomorrow slang. The millionaire's daring daughter had just invaded the bachelor apartment of a skirt-shy young professor—when the telephone clamored out.

"Cut it short," growled Warren. "No long-winded talk."

"Hello! . . . Yes, I did forget. I'll ask him now." Then, her hand over the mouthpiece, "Dear, it's Mrs. Graham. She wants to ask about a mortgage."

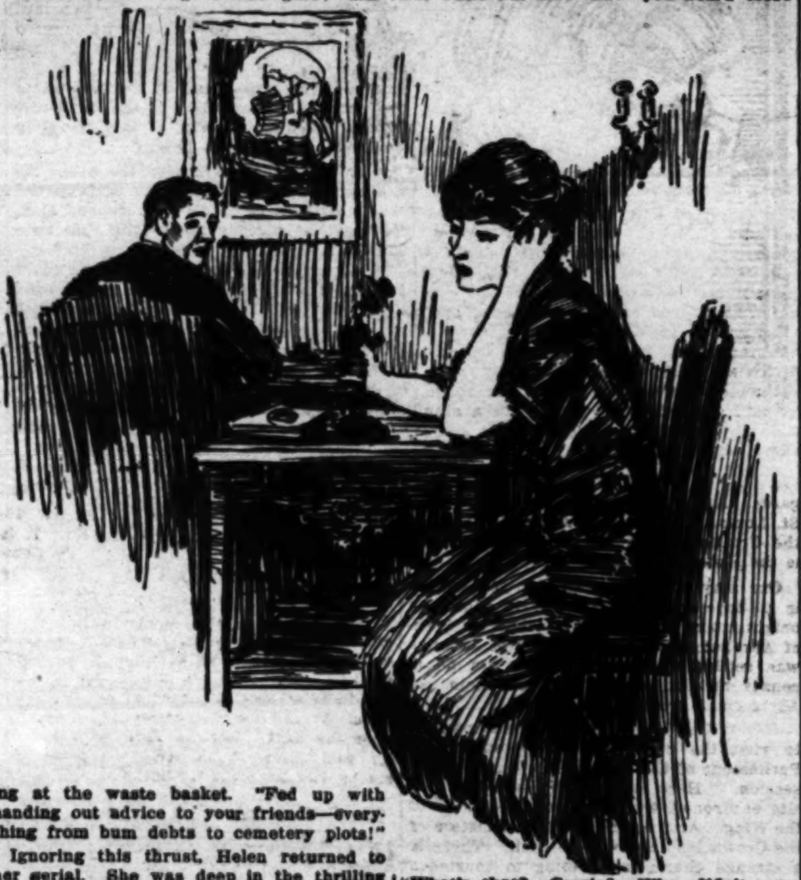
"Can't talk to her now. Tell her to call me at the office."

"You might just speak to her. It won't take——"

But at a threatened explosion, Helen hastily turned back to the instrument.

"I'm awfully sorry, but Mr. Curtis brought home a lot of work tonight. He says if you call him at his office tomorrow, he'll be glad to talk to you then."

"Needn't have rung in that 'glad'," aiming at the waste basket. "Fed up with handing out advice to your friends—everything from bum debts to cemetery plots!"



"What's that? Carrie? Why didn't you say who it was?"

Ignoring this thrust, Helen returned to her serial. She was deep in the thrilling episode where the young professor comes in at 1 a. m. to find the irrepressible m. d. d. coolly smoking his cigarettes—when the door-bell rang.

"Darnation!" fumed Warren. "If that's anybody to call—they don't get in. Say—oh, say anything! Here's your chance to cook up something."

It was Mrs. Reynolds from the tenth floor.

"I just ran down to ask about your seamstress. Could she come to me Friday?"

"You can write her. I'll give you the address," fluttered Helen.

"She hasn't a telephone?" Mrs. Reynolds, uninvited, followed her in. "Oh, good evening, Mr. Curtis. Do you work at night? The doctor made Jack stop. Said he'd break down. Now he never brings work home, and gets just as much done."

After his glum "good-evening," Warren, ignoring Mrs. Reynolds's garrulity, kept on writing.

"Is this her address? Thank you so much. You know my navy crepe? I want her to make that over. Oh, is this the last 'Fashion Art'?" stooping over the magazines piled on the floor. "May I look at it? Maybe I can find——"

"Take it with you" eagerly. "I'm quite through with it."

"I'll just look at it here," dropping into a chair. "Now that's a good tunic-skirt. No, I couldn't stand that fullness at the hips. I must have a slim line. Wonder if I've enough to make those loose panels? Let's see how much it takes. Page thirty-four. Why do they run the descriptions way back?"

Serenely unconscious of Warren's furious glare, leisurely she turned through the intruding ads to page thirty-four.

"Do take it with you," urged Helen. "You needn't bother to return it."

"Have you last month's? I might find something I like better. Yes, here it is, and here's the 'Ladies' Companion'—that always has some fashions."

"Yes, take that, too. Take them all," desperately.

"No, I can run through them here. I just want to get an idea."

"You two go into the next room," gruffed Warren. "Chatter in there."

"Oh, am I disturbing you, Mr. Curtis? I'll run right along—I didn't intend to stay. But while I'm here—have you heard those young men, who sublet the Morgan apartment, were asked to leave? Too many gay parties."

"No, we hadn't heard. Oh, I do want to show you my new luncheon set."

In the dining-room, away from Warren's menacing scowl, Helen's tension relaxed.

The Italian linen cloth and napkins duly admired, Mrs. Reynolds finally departed with the three magazines and the seamstress's address.

"Warren, you were perfectly horrid. I'm surprised she wasn't offended."

"Huh, take a brickbat to make a dent in that gas-bag. She'd have chinned there for an hour. Next time I've any work to do, I stay at the office."

"I wish you'd stayed there tonight! That's three of my friends you've almost insulted. And it's always my friends you're rude to."

"Well you notice mine aren't always buttin' in. But don't worry, next time I'll not come home. And you needn't set up a howl about being left alone. Here, get down! Take your tail out of that ink!"

Pussy Purr-Mew, brushed from the table, her ruffled dignity sought the solace of Helen's lap.

Stroking her silky fur, Helen once more took up "Feverish Folly." The bachelor apartment scene ending with discreet dots, the next chapter opened at dawn with the athletic m. d. d. getting into her own room via the veranda roof.

"Take that receiver off the hook!" exploded Warren, as the telephone again shrilled out. "And leave it off! That's the last call tonight!"

"Hello! . . . Oh, I'm afraid not this evening. I'll ask him, but I——"

"Won't talk to anybody," he bellowed. "Cut 'em off!'

"Don't shout so, dear. I'll tell her. I'm awfully sorry, Carrie, but he has to work tonight and——"

"What's that? Carrie? Why didn't you say who it was?"

Crossing the room he snatched the receiver, elbowing her away.

"Hello, Carrie! . . . . Yes, I was working, but you come right along. . . . What's that? . . . Shouldn't think they'd have all those restrictions on that lot. Got the deed with you? . . . Good. Bring it right over."

Then, briskly turning from the phone, he started to gather up his papers.

"They're in town—at his mother's. Carrie wants me to look over the deed for that lot they bought. Some restriction clause they've rung in on 'em."

"So you're going to see her now?" repressing her flaming resentment.

"Heard what I said, didn't you?" again missing the waste basket.

"You're not going to stop? She needn't stay late. Can't you work afterward?"

"Now I'm not going to hurry Carrie off. I can finish in the morning."

"You could've done that all along! You broke up a bridge party and insulted my friends because you had to work. But the moment your sister calls up——"

"Well, what of it?" belligerently. "Now don't start anything. Where in blazes's that rubber band I had here? That confounded cat knocked it off?"

The intricate design of the Persian rug and the blazing indignation in her eyes, prolonged Helen's search for the rubber band.

"That cake we had for dinner—any left?" jamming the papers into his brief case. "Well trot it out while Carrie's here. You're always rushing refreshments for everybody else. And some of that prune wine you made. Not that last punk stuff—but the good batch. And don't turn it to vinegar looking at it with that mug! Every time Carrie comes you pull a sour face. Now snap out of it!"

Hit of the Season

GEORGE ADE was complaining of the decadence of the drama:

"No wonder our drama is bad," he said. "So many of our managers are ignoramuses. Ex-shoeblacks, ex-newsboys—that sort of thing, you know.

"One of these chaps went to Austria last summer to see if he couldn't pick up a winner in the shape of a musical comedy, a second 'Merry Widow' or 'Dollar Princess.' Well, as he was knocking round Vienna one afternoon, he saw a theater with an enormous sign on its front—'Geschlossen.'

"'Sounds good, that,' he said to himself. 'I bet "Geschlossen" is the stuff.

"So, soon as he got back to his hotel, he buttonholed an American newspaper correspondent and said:

"'Hey, bo, how are they doin' down at the op'ry house with the "Geschlossen" thing?'

"The correspondent laughed, thought a moment, and then answered:

"'They're turning people away.'

"'Holy smoke!' said the manager, and he dashed off in a taxicab to buy a seat. When he dashed back again an hour later he knew that 'Geschlossen' means 'Closed.'"

Hold Her, Deacon!

THE late John A. Rathom, the editor patriot of Providence, always urged young men of aristocratic birth to enter politics.

"An aristocracy," he once said in an after-dinner speech, "has the fault, certainly, of being very cautious and slow, but in politics, that isn't a fault, whatever it may be elsewhere.

"Elsewhere it is a fault, yes. An aristocratic gentleman in frock coat and silk hat dashed out of a Fifth avenue club one afternoon in a rainstorm and hailed a passing bus.

"'Full inside—plenty of room on top,' said the conductor, and at this the gentleman halted uncertainly with one foot on the roadway and the other on the 'bus step.

"'Full inside, lots of room on top,' repeated the conductor rather impatiently.

"Still the gentleman hesitated.

"'Hurry up, sir,' said the conductor. 'Full inside, room on top. Can't wait here all day. Are you comin' or ain't you comin'?'

"Then at last the gentleman spoke.

"'Hang it,' he said, in his aristocratic drawl; 'can't you see I'm making up my mind?'"

According to Hoyle

AUGUSTINE BIRRELL, in his early days at the bar, often had many poor clients. On one occasion the defendant was so poor that Birrell offered to handle his case for nothing. Birrell won the case and the grateful client sent him $3.25.

In order not to hurt the man's feelings Mr. Birrell accepted the fee; but a fellow lawyer reproached him for doing so.

"Don't you know," said the fellow lawyer, "that it is unprofessional to take less than $10?"

"Well," said Mr. Birrell seriously, "I took all the poor beggar had. You don't consider that unprofessional, do you?"

MOSES SAMPSON had been arrested for helping himself, illegally, to a neighbor's chickens.

"Guilty, or not guilty?" demanded the judge.

"You heard me! Have you an alibi?"

"Oho! Yessah! Didn' onnerstan' yo' at fust. Yo' mean de alley by which ah escaped with dem chickens?"

Too Wise

TWO Janesville (Wis.) girls recently went to New York to see the sights. They had been there several days and hadn't made much progress in taking in the places of interest, when they ran across an old friend from their home town. They told her of bus rides they had taken in Fifth ave. and trolley trips, but they had lost much time, they complained.

"Why didn't you use the subway?" asked the friend.

"The subway!" they both exclaimed. "We're afraid of the subway. We haven't been down in it at all. We're not quick enough for that."

Astonished, the friend drew from them that their impression of the subway had been formed from scenes in motion picture plays. In this a man carrying a big lunch basket and a fishing pole was trying to get his wife and six children aboard a train at Times Square. Every time the man would get in the car the door would bang against his fishing pole and if his wife got in some of the kids would fail to make the door. Then they'd have to rush to the other end to get out again or the crowd would trample the family and scatter them in panic. Eventually the train pulled out, the lunch basket spilled on the platform and the weeping mother and two children left behind.

So the Janesville girls concluded they were not quick enough for a subway.

A HOSPITAL surgeon was imparting clinical instructions to a half dozen students. Pausing at the bedside of a doubtful case, he said:

"Now, gentlemen, do you think this is or is not a case for operation?"

One by one the students made their diagnosis, and all came to the conclusion that it was not.

"Gentlemen," continued the surgeon, "All of you are wrong, and I shall operate tomorrow morning."

"No, you won't!" exclaimed the patient, as he rose from his bed. "Six to one is a good majority. Give me my clothes!"

Wrong Cue

TOMMY DRIBBLER was being given a trial for the great football club, the Hackersand Hashers. If he was a success he would be signed on as a pro at a weekly salary.

"Becky," he said to his wife, "if I am asked to sign professional forms I shall drive home in a hansom cab; so, if you see me coming down the road in a cab throw all the furniture out of the window, for I shall buy you a new home."

"All right!" said Becky.

After a long wait Becky saw her husband coming along in a hansom cab, and straightway she started throwing the furniture about.

But Dribbler at the top of his voice shouted:

"Stay your hand, Becky! I've broken my leg!"

DR. W. W. KEEN, the famous Philadelphia surgeon who recently received an honorary degree from the University of Paris, said at a luncheon:

"A strange fact about the medical men of England is that they don't care to be called by their titles. Except on official occasions an English medical man would rather you called him 'Mr.' than 'Dr.'

"A Harley street specialist of great renown was golfing one morning when an acquaintance shouted to him cheerily across the links:

"'Good morning, doctor!'

The specialist shouted back in a gruff voice:

"'Good morning, wholesale manufacturer of boots and shoes!'"

SENATOR WALSH of Montana said in New York the other day:

"Warlike States hate one another because they see their own faults reflected in one another. It's like the Washington-Jefferson story.

Fatal Mistake

IT WAS a $6 murder. One negro shot another. This is his verbatim police confession, with the names altered because so-called confessions are often repudiated:

"I went to call on Mr. Brown at his home on Antoine street. I knocked on the door and Mr. Brown said to me, 'Come right in, Peg-Leg.' so I went in.

"I looked at Brown and I says to him, 'Brown, would y'all mind givin' me back them six smackers y'all owes me?'

"Mr. Brown he just smiled at me and he says:

"'Peg-Leg, they ain't a chanct in the world foh you to get them six bucks.'

"'Peg-Leg, I told you you ain't got no chance to get them six bucks. There's mah proof layin' right there on that there table.'

"Well, sir, I took one squint at Brown and then I got scared. I reckoned he might shoot me, so I jest fired as fast as I could.

"Course, they ain't no use mah telling you I never will get them six smackers now."

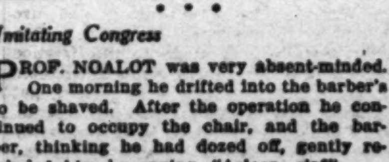
Eulogy

SENATOR MAGNUS JOHNSON met at a Washington reception the other day a dirt farmer from back home.

"Senator," said the farmer, "I didn't vote for you, but I wanted to see you win."

"Weak support," said Senator Johnson, and he added:

"You remind me of Deacon Miller, who was delegated to speak a good word in memory of Bill Simmons, deceased. The deacon refused this duty at first, for Bill had been a pretty bad customer. In the end, though, he accepted the job, and on Sunday he rose and discharged it in this way:



"'Breddern and sistern, Ah done promised fo' to say a good word fo' William Simmons, deceased, and so Ah hereby says we all hopes he's gwine whar we all knows he hain't.'"

Imitating Congress

PROF. NOALOT was very absent-minded. One morning he drifted into the barber's to be shaved. After the operation he continued to occupy the chair, and the barber, thinking he had dozed off, gently reminded him by saying, "Asleep, sir?"

The professor started. "Bless me, no!" he exclaimed. "I am not asleep, but I am terribly short-sighted. When I took my glasses off I was no longer able to see myself in the mirror opposite, and naturally I supposed I had already gone home!"

No Argument

LAWYER, playright and poet, Judge E. A. Perry is an admirable raconteur. One of his best stories concerns Lord Mansfield, who paid little attention to religious holidays. He once even suggested that the court might sit on Good Friday.

The members of the bar were horrified. Sergt. Davy, who was on the case, bowed in acceptance of the proposition: "If your lordship please; but your lordship will be the first judge that has done so since Pontius Pilate!"

The court adjourned until Saturday.

Trapped

HE WAS a well-dressed, dignified-looking man whom the casual observer would have taken for a banker. He entered a Glendale car and shnk gratefully into a seat. The car was not crowded and as it started his eye fell on a newspaper lying near him. Unobtrusively he edged in his seat toward it, at the same time glancing to see if he was observed.

Finally he sneaked out a hand and annexed the sheet. He opened it hastily and sought to hide himself behind it. But his triumph was short lived.

"Where d'ya get that stuff?" boomed a voice and a big hand belonging to the man seated next the dignified one reached out and snatched the paper from him. "If ya want this sheet it'll cost ya exactly two cents!"

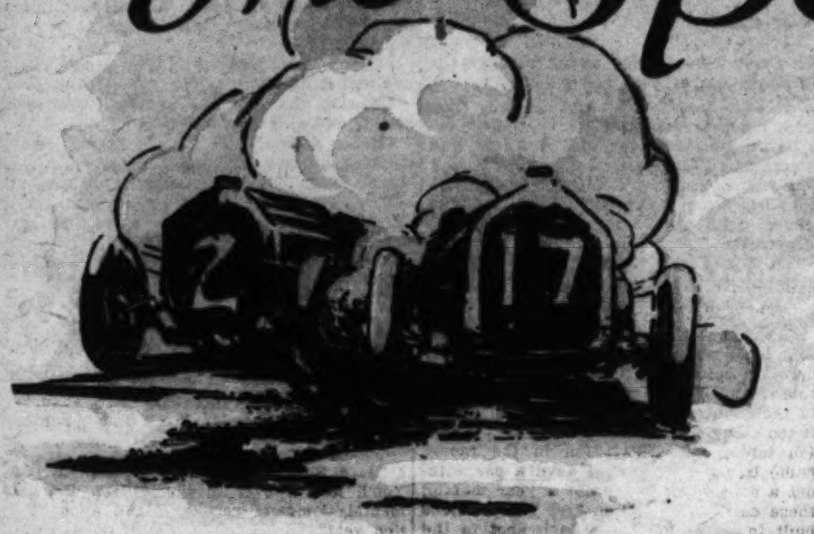
The Spectre of th



REX MONROE had figured well. Satisfied that he had the best car in his career, he got away with the starter's flag like a flash. In fifteen laps of the two-and-a-half mile brick track he forged from fourth to second place. But his plan of action did not stop there. He settled himself more determinedly in his narrow seat, nodded to Steve Kelly, his mechanician, seated on his right, and opened his throttle wider. He spoke no word, for so close was the bond between the two that words were not needed, and if they had been needed they could not have been heard above the roar of the self-made gale sweeping by their ears and the noise of thirty hurtling race cars, their drivers all bent on finishing the International Sweepstakes first. The hundred thousand and more people who were watching the race were expecting much of Rex Monroe since he had shot, meteorlike, across the racing horizon the year before until he had gained the topmost pinnacle of fame—the Three-A racing championship.

Now he was battling the first car for the lead. The spectators tensed. The speed duel for which they had been waiting was on, and Monroe was not disappointing them. They knew he had the speed to go into the lead, but they did not know that he had determined that this one race, with its $20,000 first place and its $15,000 accessory prize money should pay for the stout car beneath him and leave him a handsome surplus too—well, this must be the time to say it—ask Jane Corrigan the all-important question.

Coming down the front stretch of the big oval in the ninety-ninth lap, Monroe gave his car everything he had. The yards separating him from the leader lessened to feet, the feet to inches, but the leader put a heavy foot on his throttle and the duel was even. But not for long. In a burst of speed Monroe took the lead. Into the south turn he flew. Into the backstretch, where his speed mounted to 116 miles an hour. Into the north turn. . . . He would soon be on the front stretch again and hear the plaudits of the mile of grandstands, though Rex Monroe never played for the grandstands' applause.

The car came out of the turn and was gathering speed for the flight past the stands. Even above the roar of the wind the driver could hear the cheering of the tens of thousands of spectators. He shifted in his seat. He had demonstrated that he had the speed. He knew he personally had the stamina to last the gruelling pace for 500 miles. He was satisfied with his car for had not he and Kelly worked as they had never worked before on its preparation? . . .

Without warning the front end of the car sagged. Simultaneously with the downward impulse, Monroe's hands tightened on his steering wheel. Broken steering knuckle! Collapsed front wheel! Broken front axle! . . . These thoughts were uppermost in the driver's mind. In the thousandth part of a second between the knowledge that something was wrong and the actual result his brain was active Kelly, too, had sensed the danger. Knowing that he could be of no use to his driver in such a crisis, he did the wise thing—slid down out of his seat onto the floor of the car, as far under the cowl as the restricted quarters would permit.

The crumpled front wheel turned inward, the frame of the car dropped to the track. The car's momentum carried it down the track with speed only slightly diminished, sparks flying from the bricks at the contact. The sliding racer hit a raised spot in the track. Its forward motion was arrested for an instant. Then it rose straight into the air, whirled drunkenly, dropped at right angles across the track, and rolled over and over sidewise, coming to a stop upside down, with its crushed wheels hanging grotesquely. . . . The perfect racing car of ten seconds before was only a mass of twisted steel!

At the hospital on the infield a girl, accompanied by two young men, forced her way through the morbid crowd clustering around the door. "I must know how badly they are hurt," she demanded of the guard. Her manner bespoke authority. It was absolutely against the rules of the guard to give the information, but he acted on impulse: "The mechanician is dead, lady, but the driver's still alive!"

After three months in the hospital Monroe emerged as sound as a dollar. Surgeon's fees had taken every cent of his savings and his car was a wreck and still unpaid for. Within a month he had signed a contract with Jason Clifford, California millionaire, to drive a car being built in Los Angeles especially for the International Sweepstakes at Indianapolis the next May. He left immediately for Los Angeles to superintend work on the car.

Came the 1st of May, and with it the movement of the race drivers toward Indianapolis to prepare for the annual 500-mile race at the end of the month. Rex Monroe arrived at the track three weeks before the race. As soon as he had unloaded his car and got his garage straightened up he quit work for the day and so timed his movements as to arrive downtown at 5:30. When Jane Corrigan came out of the Circle office building after a hard day of trying to keep her mind on her stenographic work, when it persisted in roaming to thoughts of a young race driver, black haired and ruddy cheeked, she plumped square into the subject of her thoughts.

"Rex! Not sure enough you! I thought you wouldn't be in until tomorrow!"

"Just wanted to surprise you, to see whether any other young man was running in the same lap with me, and likely to take first place in the Corrigan sweepstakes."

"Smarty!" she breathed, as she hooked her arm in his.

Monroe plunged into the work of preparation for the biggest race of the year with all the vim he felt in once more being back in his home town. He worked early and late doing the thousand and one things that go to make a race car wellnigh perfect. Ten days before the race he reported to Clifford that he was ready for a speed trial. "She's tuned to the minute, Mr. Clifford," he said. "We'll try her now, and then we'll have plenty of time to work on her before the qualification trials."

The driver's heart was light as he wheeled the yellow Clifford Special out. He had worked the car out on the Los Angeles track. Without taking it out for a trial he knew it was capable of turning laps at well over 100 miles an hour on the four-cornered brick course whose fame had spread the world over.

"What do you think she'll do for four laps?" Clifford fingered his gold stopwatch as he spoke.

"She'll turn the four laps at 100 an hour easily. Of course we can't average that in the race, because no car will stand it that long, but we won't do any damage for four laps at that speed, and it will give us an accurate line on what we really do have under the hood if we have to use it for a few laps to win the race."

Monroe warmed his car up for two laps and then held up his hand as he entered the front stretch as a signal to Clifford that he was ready for the trial. It was a half mile from the head of the stretch to the starting tape, and by the time the Special reached the wire it was traveling well over 112 miles an hour.

Four times the car circled the oval. As it stopped at the tape, after making the trial, a look at Clifford's face showed Monroe what he already knew—that his time had been miserably slow.

"They told me on the coast that you could drive this Hoosier track with your eyes shut," Clifford snarled, "and I guess that was the way you just drove it. Ninety-one miles an hour with a hundred-mile car isn't going to get us any place in the race. Is that all the speed you got?" The irate owner advanced toward the driver as he spoke, his face working with rage. "You're yellow—yellow as the color of that car! That's what's the matter. You're afraid to drive this track because you had an accident on it last year. I know your kind! Got no guts! Champion race driver of America! Bunk! And I signed you up for a year! No wonder you put a year's contract over on me. I'll——"

Tommy Canfield and Bob Manson jumped off their perch on the safety wall. The next instant Tommy was planted square before Clifford, and a tenth of a second afterward Clifford was knocked flat by as pretty a left hook as ever one would care to see

Clifford arose and rushed at his opponent. A speedway guard grabbed him, while others performed the same office for his assailant. Bob Manson had made no move to prevent what had happened. His slower-moving mind was no match for Tommy's when it came to action.

"There's just one thing I want to tell you, you hunk of mud!" Tommy sputtered. "I'll cram every word like that down your damn throat every time you say it. Rex isn't yellow!"

"He's not, eh? Well, what do you call it? Here's a car he says himself will do over a hundred miles an hour for four laps and he wheels it around at ninety-one. And he's got me tied up with a contract for a year!"

"Clifford has the wrong idea." The discredited driver spoke quietly. "I won't hold him to that contract. He can cancel it right now. No use trying to explain. There's something wrong."

"I'll say there's something wrong!" Clifford vociferated.

Tommy Canfield made another effort to break from his captors. Rex took hold of his arm and together the three walked over to a car standing alonside the judge's stand and drove out of the grounds. There wasn't a word spoken on the four-mile drive to the hotel. Like automatons the three walked to the elevator floor and filed into Monroe's room. Rex gazed moodily at the floor. More to himself than to his friends came the words, "There's something wrong."

"Listen, Rex, old timer. Don't say another word. We'll let you think it over." Canfield was too well versed in reading human nature to waste time in sympathetic words.

Once down on the street, Tommy turned to Bob: "Ain't it hell? What'll Jane say when she hears?" There was anxiety in the little Irishman's voice.

"We'll let things ride a while. We've got to figure the thing out," Bob replied, as he threw his cigar forcefully into the gutter. They separated. Tommy to get back to his job of being one of the best cigar salesmen in the world knew it. The very newspapers which a year before had been so keen to proclaim him champion of America were now just as keen to announce his downfall.

All that day Monroe kept to his room.

"I'm not a coward," he told Jane that night at her home. "I didn't feel a bit worried about the track. Never occurred to me. But when I got around close to where we had our spill last year my foot just wouldn't stay on the throttle. There was Steve giving me the signal to slow down and take it easy, just as though I had twenty miles on the nearest man. That sounds foolish, but that's just what happened. I'm not afraid, though. Not at all. It's—Janie, I can't just explain it, but you understand. I——"

"Listen, Rex. I know you're not a coward. I don't care what anybody else says, I know you're not. The world just can't understand. Let's look at the matter sensibly. Tell me what happened."

After she had heard the story she put her arms around him. "We'll have to think this over, dear. We don't care if that old Clifford did turn you down. You can easily get another car to drive; you know that."

Covert jibes followed Monroe; heads nodded at him but not to him as he made his way to the track the next day. He hunted up Harry Quiller, race impresario, who had four cars entered in the race. He and Quiller had been good friends for years, and he was sure Quiller would give him the wheel of one of his cars.

"They never come back, Rex," Quiller told him, when he asked for a chance to drive. "Better not try any more races on this track. You're good for any other track in the country, but not this one. I've seen it too many times. You know yourself that I'm telling the truth. I'm in the racing game to make money. I have a car without a driver, but I've spent a year making these cars. They're the first 122-inch jobs built in America. It's a high spot in the racing game—this race. And, as the owner of several cars, I don't want to fall down. I've got orders for a bunch of cars. I'd a lot rather sell you the car and let you go it on your own. Then it won't reflect on me when you fail."

"You know I haven't a dime, Harry. No use talking to me about buying your car. If I hadn't spent all my cash on surgeons' bills last year I'd have had a car of my own long ago. That's why I went with Clifford. I have to drive somebody else's car this race."

"You take my advice—stay out of it. When we move to Kansas City I'll give you a year's contract and you'll make a pile of dough on the rest of the races."

Monroe's face flushed. "I know you think you've got the right slant, Harry, and that's the argument we always used to put up—they never come back. But I'm going to get a car for this race and I'm going to beat the jinx. The thing is mental; that's what it is. It's not physical at all."

"It's there, whatever it is," Quiller answered. "I know that and so do you, until it comes to your own case. Look at Benson—isn't worth a dime on the Beverly track since he drove into the grandstand and killed eight people. Jimmy Twyman—he couldn't win a wheelbarrow race at Altoona. Dingler—Tacoma is his hoodoo. Indianapolis is yours. Away from this track, Rex, I'll back you to beat any driver in the world."

A sudden nausea assailed Monroe. He turned away from Quiller, convinced that further argument was useless. In the afternoon he went over to the speedway manager's office. "I'd like to borrow one of your old race jobs, T. E., if you'll let me," he said.

"Sure, Rex. Welcome to anything we got You'll find it over in the Allison Experimental Company garage. Make a connection yet?"

"Not yet."

By special permission of the speedway manager, Rex waited until the track was closed for the day, and again took the borrowed car out. Resolved to test a theory which had been battering at his brain for hours he drove the reverse way of the track. He increased his speed to ninety-five miles an hour, and as he approached the accident spot he jammed his foot to the floor. There was no reflex action! Round and round the track he flew, the flood of moonlight making the going safe. Lap after lap he averaged a hundred miles an hour. But in spite of the eerie conditions surrounding the test, he no longer saw Kelly's warning gesture. He left the track exultant. He had proved satisfactorily that he was not yellow. His problem was mental, as he had felt, and not physical.

Three days before the race.

Monroe paced his room. He hadn't slept soundly for a week. His nerves were raw. He was a failure. Nobody believed in him. Owners who a year before would almost have got down on their knees to induce him to drive their cars now turned a deaf ear.

. . . He reached for the bottle of medicine Doc Alson had sent him to quiet his nerves, took a double dose and went to bed, but not to sleep.

Out at Jane Corrigan's home three heads were in conference. Tommy Canfield had the floor: "I got down on my knees and begged Quiller to let him drive but the old tightwad said nothin' stirrin'. Tells me confidentially that a tourin' car's about Rex's speed on this track. And just to rub it in, he offered to sell me the car. Said I could let Rex drive it then without anybody kickin'. Made me sore and gave me an idea. I tells him, solemn as an owl: 'All right, Mr. Quiller, that's really what I was out to see you about. I'm headin' a syndicate to buy the car and I'm askin' you what the price is.' He tells me twelve thousand smackers and he didn't wiggle a eye winker when he slipped it on me. I hemmed and hawed and said we'd close the deal tomorrow at 6 p. m. I'll make him sweat, anyway. He'll not try very hard to get Rankin signed up, and the Ajax team will get him sure. And Rankin's the last good driver unsigned except Rex. By the time old Quiller finds out I can't even buy a sack of peanuts for cash he'll have to do some tall hustlin' to get a driver."

As Tommy spoke Jane Corrigan's eyes grew brighter, and as he finished she burst forth: "We've just got to do it!"

The two men looked at each other, then they looked at the girl.

"We've got to do it. Why didn't we think of it before? We'll make it all come true, that's what we'll do! The three of us will take over the car. We're the syndicate you were acting for!"

"Workin' miracles nowadays, Jane—turnin' a buck into 12,000 fish?" Tommy was the first to recover his tongue.

"I'm serious. Don't we believe in Rex? And wouldn't he give his head to any of us if we asked him? And can't we do the

The Garden Beautiful in Southern California

INFORMATION BOTH PRACTICAL AND SCIENTIFIC. BY ERNEST BRAUNTON

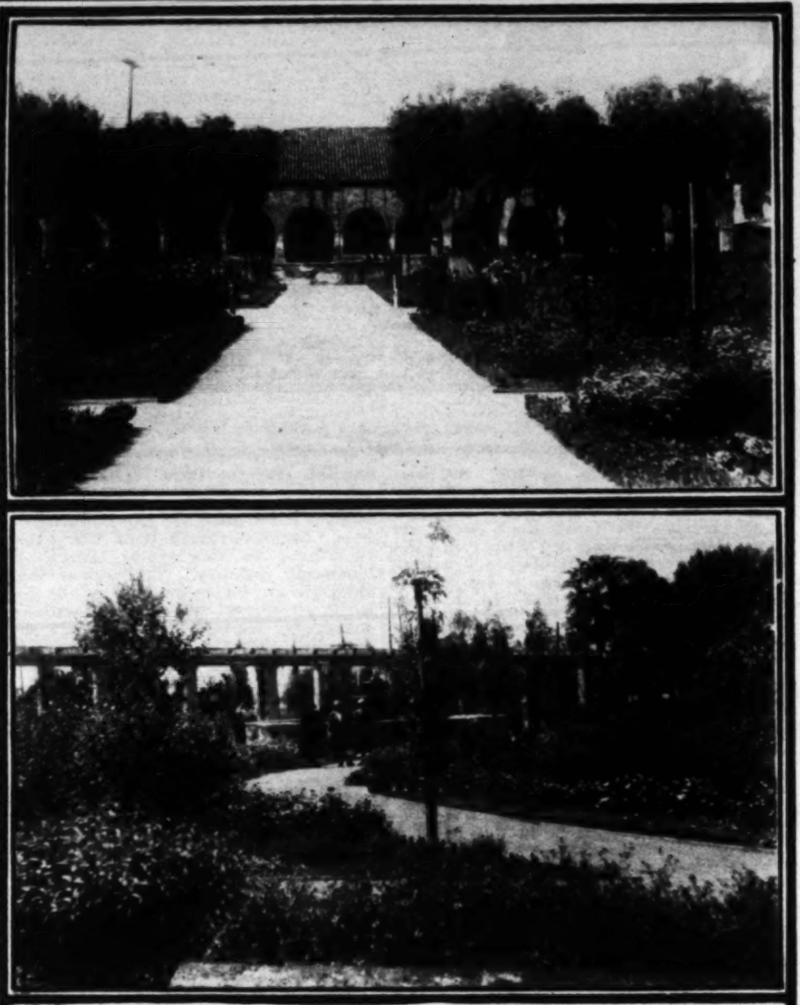
NEARLY all interested in gardening have gardens of their own in some stage of development. It is, therefore, hardly to be expected that many can follow literally and to the fullest, the advice here given on planning the garden. But every garden, no matter how full it may be of good material, is, perhaps, capable of being improved, while, happily, he who has just begun may profit largely if he follows the fundamental rules which should govern all landscape development. They are first: preserve open lawn centers; second, plant in masses and not in an isolated way; third, avoid straight lines.

These three rules are really nature's laws, for to nature we turn for instruction in the naturalistic school of landscaping. Nature herself preserves open centers. We have the boundless prairies, great stretches of grassy plains, and about the smaller ones are grouped other vegetation, trees, shrubs and lowlier plants by which the picture is framed.

The violation of the first rule is extremely common everywhere. The owner or planner seldom realizes or appreciates the landscape possibilities of even a small city lot. Having at his disposal a limited frontage, he usually runs a path down the middle to the front door, leaving on either side a small patch for lawn scarcely larger than a tablecloth. Right there he loses his landscape. The entrance should be pretty well to one side, no matter what the position of the front door. Only in this way may one have a fair and inviolate stretch of lawn on a small lot. Into the center of each of these little green squares he plants a palm or other large growing object. Having done this, he cannot stand in the center of his landscape or landscapes and view the scenery about him, for the center is occupied. He should be able to view groups of trees or shrubbery, or both, disposed in the border in a natural arrangement. Instead of having the landscape around him, he has to walk around his palms if he would view his handiwork. If one has insufficient space for palms aside from the center of the two plats, use none; there is usually sufficient space in the borders of any garden, however, for fan palms or the still more beautiful Cocos plumosa. A large Canary Island palm is a beautiful plant and casts a satisfying shade, like a gigantic umbrella. Perhaps a place could be found for one in the back yard.

In America we make the mistake of trying to crowd everything in plant life into the front yard. There usually is ample space in the back yard for much in the way of massed trees and shrubs that we generally seek to place in the front yard, leaving the former bare and unattractive. It should be hedged about with border plantations, so it may be screened from the neighbors and that the owners might enjoy a little privacy and seclusion, preserving, so far as possible, the same open center as in the front yard, that it may be usable for drying grounds and other conveniences usually required in the rear of all human habitations. But as much art should be manifest and an equally attractive picture built as may be seen in front of the house. Here should be placed such garden accessories as contribute to the comfort of the family. Here we may have rustic arbors, trees between which hammocks may swing, vine-shaded seats and all the garden comforts for which room could not be found in the front yard. Here may be made the ideal home yard and lounging place that makes for landscape charm and woos the visitor to come again and again, either because of the beauty of the picture, the sufficiency of comfort and interest, or of all combined —an ideal retreat for rest.

"Planting in masses and not isolated" suggests you should not have scattered effects. Orchards are so planted for economic reasons: ease of cultivation, irrigation, harvesting, etc., but ornamental gardens should not have the plants so disposed Here each kind should be massed by itself. This not only gives natural grouping, but adds to the character of the garden, for it would never do to have similar materials in all parts as each and every part would then appear alike and the garden would be without character either in part or as a whole. In the same way nature keeps all departments inviolate; aside from great stretches of plains, her material is grouped in zones or patches of wild flowers, masses of shrubbery, and groups, groves or forests of trees.



San Fernando Mission and Gardens.

The Los Angeles City Park Department has transformed the former barren setting of the old-time mission into one of the beauty spots of the San Fernando Valley.

Woman has a more refined taste than man and where she has entered the realm of landscaping has generally been more successful in planning and arrangement. Anyone may note her superior taste by the arrangement of the house furniture. Pianos, bookcases, couches or sofas and other large objects are made with plain backs so she may place them out in the center, as does not place them out in the center, as man does with his large palms, where they would destroy all proper utility of the rooms as well as the art which should govern the home picture, but she so places them that the open center of the room is preserved. This makes the limited area usable to the greatest possible extent and aids her in arranging the furniture to present the best appearance, bringing harmony and art, which should go hand in hand.

Make every part of the garden stand for one thing. If one has several shrubs of one species or one kind, group them together, in one place. If a woman has a collection of Indian baskets, she may keep them on one shelf, in one cabinet or on one mantel. So, too, do we keep a collection of minerals in one cabinet or case so that the visitor, either layman or expert, may see and compare them expeditiously. Why do we not carry out the same rules in the garden? If one has a collection of roses, he should plant them together, not only that that part of the garden may stand for the character that roses lend but for convenience in comparing the different varieties, either for your own satisfaction or for the pleasure and information of visitors. The same rule should govern with all garden material.

Ruffled Petunias

A grower of petunias at Laguna Beach, Orange county, has the largest ruffled and flounced petunias we have seen. The combination of a splendid strain, good soil and favorable climate could alone produce such splendid results. The variety of colors is very great; two dozen flowers brought in by a visitor to the place is sufficient evidence, for no two of them were alike.

Weeds

Weeds are not necessarily injurious to soils; they may be beneficial. They injure crops only, through competition. If the weeds are the larger, the planted crop will be suffocated, after a manner. If the crop is predominant, every weed uses plant food that the crop should have taken up. But if a crop of weeds be grown on a soil and turned under at the right time, or at right times (for two crops may be grown) the effect upon the soil is one of benefit. It is not, however, a profitable proceeding for one is certainly out the cost of plowing.

The Transformation

In the last edition of U. S. Lyon's Gardening in California, now twenty years old, Henry W. O'Melveny wrote as follows in the "Introductory:" "The early Spanish settlers in Southern California were not given to floriculture. When the ranches were but cattle ranges and the plow unused, the cultivation of orchards and the planting of gardens were of secondary consideration. In the olden days the country was a treeless expanse, covered with herds of cattle and flocks of sheep; here and there were the adobe houses of the owners, practically bereft of the shade of tree or bright color of a flower; today, the same land is covered with orchards of orange, lemon, apricot, prune and other fruits; its roadways lined with hedgerows, and its many homes set amidst a profusion of flower blooms. The contrast indicates the successive discoveries of our transported population in that unknown land—the plant-life possibilities of Southern California."

It Grows Here

Woolly-pod milkweed, a plant growing rather abundantly in parts of Western California, has long been suspected by stockmen of being poisonous to cattle and sheep. Recent investigations by the United States Department of Agriculture have shown that it is very poisonous to these animals. Although no cases have been reported, it is thought that it may also be poisonous to horses. Animals are not likely to eat it except when other forage is scarce, but it is particularly dangerous as only a small quantity is necessary to cause damage and the dried plant may be eaten in hay.

Sprays Not Poisonous

Never spray fruit of any kind when in full bloom. This encourages poor pollination. Furthermore, an arsenical spray, applied to blooming fruit, will kill many bees, resulting in either the loss or severe weakening of entire stands. Do not attempt to spray in a high wind. Even though the breeze is light, always work with the wind, as less spray is wasted by that method and the job is more pleasant for the operator. Do not be afraid to eat sprayed fruit. There is absolutely no danger from arsenical poisoning. Practically all of our commercial apples are sprayed four or five times, yet we have never heard of an individual being poisoned from eating such fruit.

Window Boxes

Window boxes should be made of redwood painted, preferably green, and kept for several years. Several holes should be bored in the bottom of the box for drainage; a thin layer of course gravel should be placed in the bottom, the box then being filled to within two inches of the top with rich sandy loam. The soil is watered and allowed to settle for a day or two before planting. It is best to set all the plants to be put in a box at one time and to leave the box inside for a few days after planting.

Cherries Are Ripe at Beaumont and Yucaipa

BY GEORGE LAW

Picking time in a Beaumont cherry orchard.

EVERY year the cherry festivals at Beaumont and Yucaipa in early June bring forward the cherry as one of Southern California's excellent fruit crops. For a few weeks, from late May until the middle of June, the cherry harvest goes on in a spirit of gaiety and festivity. Auto parties swarm into the cherry districts by the hundreds; visitors are indulged in their fancy for picking their own cherries; the fruit is sold in the orchards and exhibit booths at a moderate price per pound; and cherry pies, made in the homes by housewives who know, add special delight to the unusual feast.

Beaumont generally holds its festival on a Saturday at the height of the harvest the first or second week in June. This year Beaumont's "week" extends from May 31 to June 8. Yucaipa sets a series of dates when the different varieties of cherries are at their best. The so-called festivals are announced in the papers in ample time to let every one know when to come.

The Beaumont district sometimes gets a touch of real winter, as witness this photograph taken in 1922. Cherry growers say the cold gives their fruit a "tang."

These two orcharding settlements lie about eighty miles due east of Los Angeles, reached by way of the Foothill or Valley boulevards through either Redlands or Riverside. Both occupy picturesque parts of the elevated plateau between the San Bernardino and the San Jacinto mountains, 2500 to 3000 feet above sea-level, directly below the three highest peaks in Southern California.

The peculiar attributes of the location, moderate altitude combined with the boreal influence of the snow-capped mountains, make cherry growing peculiarly successful. While the cherry does not demand winter or marked seasonal changes, still it thrives best and develops the best flavor outside the boundaries of the typical Orange Belt climate. Beaumont and Yucaipa have a somewhat eastern climate, and consequently their cherries possess more of the eastern tartness, especially prized in pie cherries, than do the California cherries grown up the coast and in the central districts. Besides cherries, Beaumont and Yucaipa raise apples and pears, a true eastern combination. Some winters the high plateau and pass between the mountain ranges becomes covered with snow; fourteen inches lay there in 1922, creating a true eastern landscape. No snow occurred during the past two winters; but the climate in December and January has the hard frosty edge of true winter every year.

It seems strange that such a winter zone should ripen the first deciduous fruit in the California calendar. The cherry trees blossom in late March and April, after both almonds and apricots; but the period from blossom to ripe fruit is less than two months; the cherries begin to ripen in May. The cherries spring a sort of glad surprise upon Southern Californians and their eastern visitors. Fresh fruit of any kind would give delight at the beginning of the season; but the cherry, fresh from the trees in the first warmth of summer, is surpassingly delightful. The season is brief and the crop is small. Under such circumstances the harvest is in itself a festival, and the fruit comes and is disposed of with scarcely the hint of a regular "deal" or of commercialism.

It is quite possible that the cherry industry of Southern California can be kept upon the plane of festival always. While there is good room for its expansion, it can never become one of the great industries, in the company of citrus fruits, walnuts, peaches, prunes, apricots, grapes, or even pears and apples. The cherry-growing districts are exceedingly limited. The fruit has been tried out in the Orange Belt and in the general deciduous fruit belt, slightly too cold for oranges; it has been tried out in high mountain valleys and in the desert; but the satisfactory location seems to exist only in valleys or plateaus where the elevation ranges from 2500 to 3500 feet, and where there is the most rainfall. Extremes of unseasonal stimulation on the one hand, and of late spring frosts on the other hand, must be avoided. Undoubtedly the present range can be extended; but great care must be exercised in the selection of new regions.

A companion fruit to the apple and the pear, the cherry blooms much earlier and therefore cannot be successfully grown in many locations where rather late frosts do not bother the later apple and pear blossoms.

Beaumont is the chief cherry center of Southern California. According to the California Crop Report for 1923, Riverside county has 519 acres in bearing cherry trees, and 135 in nonbearing. With the exception of but a few mountain ranches, which did not in all probability get into the record, the Riverside cherry industry is confined to the Beaumont district. According to local authorities the present cherry acreage bearing and nonbearing is about 1000 acres, with an expected yield this seson of 600 tons. The Beaumont district possesses about 10,000 acres in all kinds of orcharding and farming. Water has been developed for about 3000 acres and the rest is dry-farmed. There are water resources in sight for the bringing in of an ultimate of about 5000 irrigated acres. Apples, pears, prunes, and peaches are also thrifty Beaumont crops; but the cherry possesses certain attractive features, both cultural and marketing, which may result in giving cherry growing the ascendency. Apples rank first now, with about 1600 acres, while pears come after cherries with 500 acres.

Beaumont and Yucaipa belong practically to the same region, separated principally by a county line. Yucaipa in San Bernardino county has about 300 acres in bearing cherry orchards and 155 in nonbearing. There apple growing is the chief industry, really a big enterprise; but the attractive features of cherry growing are turning the minds of Yucaipa ranchers more and more to the possibilities of developing that industry. Yucaipa boasts the biggest cherry ranch in Southern California, Cherrycroft, at an elevation of 3100 feet, to which thousands of visitors go every year.

Both Beaumont and Yucaipa have the true winter climate, moderated in time to be safe for early blossoming fruits. Temperatures range from 20 to 100 degrees; rain and snow during the Southern California rainy season; no foggy weather; typical spring weather, such as occurs in the East; and summer days cooled by mountain breezes. Their average rainfall is considerably in excess of that of the Orange Belt, being about twenty inches. Up to April 19th this year, 12.93 inches had fallen, far more than had been received in Los Angeles. Such fine amounts of rainfall favor dry farming, while also making it possible some years to raise fruit without irrigation. It is not safe, however, to attempt orcharding without provision for irrigation.

Cherry orchards are commonly irrigated four or five times at intervals of a month during spring and summer. The orchards are cultivated between times; some growers raise cover crops and plow them in early in the spring. The orchards need little attention beyond that.

The cost of growing cherries is quite low in comparison with that of growing most other fruits. That is the chief advantage in favor of cherries, from a commercial point of view. Spraying, which adds big items to apple, pear, and most other fruit growing, is not necessary with cherries. Pruning is not necessary after the fifth year, except to cut out dead branches; although some cherry growers keep their trees cut back as an advantage in picking the fruit. Pruning, if it is practiced, should be done in the summer, directly after the harvest, for that is the time when the gum tends least to exude from the wounds. Gum causes the most trouble with cherry trees, attracting pests and disease when it is permitted to collect, and leading to decay. About the only other thing that the grower has to combat is gophered roots; but every orchardist has to be on his guard against the destructive gopher. Die-back sometimes occurs, when the dead parts of the branches must be clipped off. Culturally the cherry tree is an inexpensive fruit tree.

The heaviest item in the cost of producing cherries is the picking. The fruit must be picked by hand in such a manner as not to detach the stems nor to bruise the cherries. Pails, ladders and field boxes form the needed equipment; the pails being fastened to the picker or hung on the ladder so that both hands are free for picking. One hand is needed to hold the twig while the other pulls off the cluster.

Most of the picking is done by the young people of the community and by desert ranchers who come up to Beaumont and Yucaipa to escape the summer heat. The pickers commonly receive two cents per pound. In the northern cherry sections where the cherries are packed in fancy boxes for shipment, pickers are usually paid by the hour, so that there will be no incentive to rush through the work. From such pickers a minimum of ten pounds of fruit per hous is expected. The Beaumont and Yucaipa pickers work more rapidly as a rule, although the festival spirit of this first brief fruit harvest pushes the money-earning proposition into the background. Later, in apricots, peaches, prunes, pears and apples, there will be plenty of work and plenty of opportunity to make better wages.

The cherries in these districts are loosely packed in Los Angeles lug boxes, twenty-eight pounds to the lug. The part of the crop that is not sold to visitors is shipped to markets throughout the Southwest, but mostly to Los Angeles, Beaumont cherries find their way as far east as El Paso. With the growth of the industry, unless the attendance at the festivals keeps pace with it, the cherry ranchers will probably in time come to practice the standard packing methods, using regular ten-pound cherry boxes, carefully layered.

But 700 tons, 1,400,000 pounds of delicious cherries, are not too much for a city the size of Los Angeles to use up entirely. Certainly an appreciative cherry eater can not be satisfied with one pound. As a matter of fact, Los Angeles consumes great quantities from the northern districts also, although the local cherries are preferred for their slightly sharper tartness by most persons who have tried them both.

The chief varieties grown at Beaumont and Yucaipa are the Bing, Black Tartarian, and Lambert, all large, purplish-black or purplish-red cherries, and the Royal Ann, a light, red-spotted cherry. All are splendid eating, and the Royal Ann is especially fine for canning. The Black Tartarian is the earliest, ripening the last of May, and the Lambert the latest, ripening the last of June. These varieties are grown together, not solely because they are fine eating cherries, but also because they interpollinate, thus increasing one another's yield.

The cherries are commonly sold at the festivals for 15 to 20 cents per pound, and net the growers 10 to 12 cents. Yields from full-bearing orchards, say, about twenty year-old trees, sometimes run as much as three tons to the acre. The trees are planted 25 by 25 feet apart, making 70 to an acre. If they are planted closer than that, more pruning must be practised to keep them from crowding. That the industry is growing is shown by the fact that 20,000 cherry trees were set out in the Beaumont district this year.

Utility and Beauty—A Good Combination

POULTRY FARM ACCOUNTING. BY HENRY W. KRUCKEBERG

"WE" ARE a firm believer in pureblooded fowl, hence advise the beginner to select a breed that appeals to his sense of beauty and the hens of which possess a reputation for good performances. For sure it is that it costs no more to maintain a standard-bred bird than a mongrel or scrub. The first cost, whether it represents foundation stock, day-old chicks or hatching eggs, may be a trifle more, but so also will be the returns later on. Mongrels or "mixed" fowl have little or no value as breeding stock, while for meat and eggs, their product, being uneven, is less desirable than that of the purebloods. Prolific egg production has been due solely to the specialty egg farmers rather than to any effort made by the average owners of ordinary farm flocks; likewise, it is the fancier and the breeder, catering to the demand for exhibition specimens and breeding stock, that have maintained the pureblood lines in our domesticated fowls, and not the average back-lotter. We seriously question if the annual yield of hen fruit per hen on the average American farm will exceed seven dozen per year, and the same applies to the average family flock, taking the country as a whole. A debt of gratitude is due to the study of performance record hens that has been so pronounced a feature in the poultry world during the past two or three decades. To it we owe fine-producing strains in the American, Asiatic, English and Mediterranean classes. In all of these there are dependable breeders whose strains have "made good" from both the economic and the fancier's point of view. These two factors are self-evident; but in addition there is the added advantage that hatching eggs from pure breds and breeding stock can often be disposed of as such, while the mongrel and its product invariably find their way to the market place, being devoid of other values.

The Value of Good Bookkeeping

The average poultry keeper is much more interested in his outdoor operations (the care of his flocks and the harvesting of his crops) than in office work, and yet good bookkeeping and mail-order salesmanship are two important factors that he cannot afford to ignore. Too many breeders are good producers but poor sellers and accountants, hence many poultry farmers know little or nothing as to their costs, and are unable to trace either profits or losses in a definite way. A good system of accounting will show where the losses are incurred and where the profits are made. This really is of vital importance. An elaborate system of accounting is uncalled for; quite to the contrary, the simpler it is, the better. Bookkeeping implies a debit for every credit, and should show at a glance the status of the business. It should show expenditures and receipts, which had better be segregated under separate titles to indicate their character. Specially designed and ruled books for poultrymen are to be had of the poultry supplies houses, but these are not essential, though convenient. The one thing is to have a "check" on the business, so that extravagance will be detected, losses avoided, waste curtailed and wear and tear diminished. These are some of the things that systematic bookkeeping will reveal in the monthly trial balance. To learn of them and cause their removal is to reduce costs of production and enhance profits.

The Buyer and Quality Stock

It will not be out of place to call the reader's attention to the fact that it is again the season of the year when breeders are reducing their stocks preparatory to caring for the growing chicks that are rapidly approaching maturity, and which will call for larger breeding and yarding facilities. With the commercial egg farmers that means to "cull out" the light-producing hens and fatten the males for the market. Breeders catering to the demand for foundation, breeding and exhibition stock resort to annual clearance sales at reduced prices during the early summer months. This applies to all classes of birds, but more particularly to high-grade breeding specimens. These prices are usually alluring to beginners and also to those who may desire a few good birds to meet particular requirements in the breeding pens. By the exercise of discretion and good judgment one can now buy extra quality birds from dependable breeders at a moderate figure. Those who may be in want of fine stock will find the months of June and July an opportune time in which to buy. There are cogent reasons for these annual sales. Scarcely ever does a season pass by when all the breeders dispose of their breeding stock. Some are "sold out," while others end the selling season with some surplus stock on hand. In addition, there are economic reasons that cannot be overlooked. The young stock is nearing maturity and demands housing and yarding facilities, hence it is essential that the breeder dispose of any surplus old birds, to afford more room for the young stock and at the same time reduce feed and labor bills. The chief advantage inures to the benefit of buyers, because it enables them to secure good stock from dependable breeders at exceptionally low prices.

A Good Man Re-elected

The thousands of poultry readers that read the pages of the Farm and Tractor section will be gratified to learn of the election (for the third time) of J. Will Blackman as a director of the American Poultry Association for the Southwest District. In competition with two opposing candidates, he was again chosen by a handsome majority. This means that as chairman of the committee on the formulation of national rules and regulations for conducting egg-laying contests Mr. Blackman will push the matter to a successful issue at the August meeting of the A.P.A.; it also means that co-operative salesmanship and distribution will come before that meeting in a national way; that an increase in the standard weights in Leghorns will not be allowed to go into a condition of innocuous desuetude, and that the square deal and real sportsmanship will prevail in the conduct of poultry shows held under the auspices of the national organization. It means much more, but these things are enough to be thankful for at the present.

Hen Fruit and Printer's Ink

Just at present there is considerable being said in the poultry press advocating an advertising campaign exploiting the nutritive value of hen fruit in the human dietary. Owing to prevailing low prices for eggs throughout the country, this plea for better salesmanship has been universally indorsed, and in certain sections a sustained advertising campaign has been more or less in evidence. For more than a decade we have consistently advocated its observance in Southern California; but outside of a few sporadic efforts, it has hardly assumed the importance of a continuous effort. T. E. Quisenberry of Kansas City, in a contribution to the poultry press exhorting organized poultry breeders to widen their markets, says: "My contention is that we must advertise poultry and eggs, especially eggs, the same as the orange growers, raisin growers, milk producers, and in the same way that other articles of food are put over, and production and profitable prices maintained by judicious advertising." But why talk so much about it? Why not do it?

Good crops and fair prices are the foundation of every sort of business prosperity.

A Personal Message To Feeders

By Albert E. Nicholls

There are tremendous profits in Scientific Feeding. But I offer a few thrifty feeders an opportunity to double those profits—to make money in the buying of their feeds as well as from the results of their feeding.

While this business has been helping feeders for the past 27 years to make more money, it has also been making money itself. Because of the great volume of the business, small profits have mounted into big earnings. Right now there are farmers throughout the Southwest who are receiving dividend checks regularly from the Nicholls Grain & Milling Co. A share of the money they spend for feed returns to them as extra profits—so that they really get Orange Brand Feeds at a lower price.

The capitalization of this company has just been doubled to take care of the rapid increase in sales. I want the new stock to go to feeders—to customers—rather than to general investors. So I am reserving a large block temporarily until I can tell you more about the "Nicholls Profit Sharing Plan." I'll tell you all about these extra profits if you'll just send the coupon below.

A 25% increase in milk production! You can do it—by using the Nicholls System of Scientific Feeding.

By actual tests with large and small herds of dairy cows we have proved that Nicholls Orange Brand Dairy Feed—fed as a concentrate in addition to bulk fodder—increases the milk flow by one-fourth.

The value of this additional milk is many times greater than the slight cost of the feed.

In addition, this scientifically blended feed contains nourishing and body-building elements that keep the cows sleek, firm and in the pink of good health.

In 27 years of careful experiment we have evolved an exact proportion for all the food elements so that there is no waste in Orange Brand Dairy Feed. Every element serves a definite purpose.

There are other dairy feeds which claim to accomplish the same results. But Orange Brand has made good—and is making good right now on hundreds of farms. Users know that—judged by results—it is the most economical feed they can buy.

Don't be satisfied with "any old feed." If your feed dealer hasn't Orange Brand, write us and we'll see that you are supplied promptly.—Nicholls Grain & Milling Co. (Importers — Manufacturers — Millers.) Established 1897, 2505 Santa Fe Ave., Los Angeles.

Fruit Season Opens

TO CALIFORNIA, the month of June brings a variety of fruits and berries, as well as a plentiful supply of melons and summer vegetables. It is the time when the fruit lover eats his first apricots, or peaches, thereafter to buy them in generous quantities until the crop is entirely harvested. The average Californian likes oranges and purchases them generously in the winter, but when the stone fruits of the summer begin to ripen, the citrus fruits are temporarily passed up. Just now, cherries are ripe, apricots are becoming plentiful, peaches are on the market and other fruits will soon appear, all within the range of the common pocketbook. Fresh fruits are recognized by food experts to be of great value in the diet and they say that everyone should eat more of them. Here no one can give the excuse that a variety is not to be had.

Southland fruit growers are facing another doubtful year and many will sell more fruit than ever locally for consumption fresh. It is timely, then, for those who intend to can and preserve to plan just what they will "put up" this year so that a little later on, when fruits are more plentiful and consequently a little cheaper they will know just how much of each fruit to purchase. In Los Angeles, housewives are exceptionally lucky in having access to two great public markets where every soil product is displayed for their selection. It would be well for more persons to patronize these markets, for one is able there to secure fresher products at a cheaper price than anywhere else in the city.

"Cherries Are Ripe"

"CHERRY Week" at Beaumont has become one of the events to be looked forward to by autoists of Southern California. Each year sees larger fleets of machines bound for the highlands at the foot of Mt. San Jacinto where the luscious mountain cherries are produced. The cherry "fans" do not all go to Beaumont, of course, as fruit just as delicious is grown near by at Yucaipa. Beaumont's cherry acreage and total yield, however, are far larger than those of its neighbor community and that is why the custom of driving out where the air is pure and the sky is blue to pick cherries in the orchards has become so associated with the former place. Beaumont's "Cherry Week" started yesterday and will last until June 8th. If you have not enjoyed the experience of driving into the orchards to "pick your own," Mr. Family Man, do not fail to do so this week. Of course, you are not compelled to pick the fruit should you choose to buy it already picked; but the "picking your own" idea has been one of the things that have made such an institution of Southern California's highland cherry festivals.

TO REPRINT BULLETIN

The college of agriculture, University of California, recently announced that the bulletin on "Avocado Culture in California," by Knowles Ryerson and H. K. Jaffa, which was issued only last fall, will be reprinted as the initial edition is now exhausted. The expansion of the avocado industry in California is given as the reason for the heavy demand for this bulletin.

PEAR PEST CIRCULAR

The Los Angeles County Horticultural Commissioner's office has prepared a circular on control of two diseases and four insect pests of pears, with particular reference to control of pear blight and codlin moth.

BIG CAMPAIGN MAPPED OUT IN WAR ON WALNUT CODLIN MOTH

FIELD observations made early in May by W. B. Hooper, walnut specialist connected with the Agricultural Extension Service, and K. L. Wolff, in charge of walnut pest control work for the County Horticultural Commissioner's office, indicated that, depending somewhat on weather conditions, the county-wide campaign for the control of the codlin moth pest planned for Los Angeles county should be timed to start between May 25 and June 1. In most sections, the survey revealed the eggs were being laid and a few young worms were being found. The moths are very active in nearly all sections. The cool, foggy weather existing at the time of this writing (May 20) made it appear that the period for spraying or dusting would be slightly delayed, probably not occurring much before June 1. Warm, bright weather on the other hand, was expected to make earlier control measures necessary, the date in that event being advanced to not later than May 25. Reliance for control of the codlin moth pest is placed principally upon early summer spraying and dusting, by the use of lead arsenate, although during recent years it has become apparent that material benefits may be secured by fall control measures.

An understanding of the life cycle of the walnut codlin moth is basic to proper practice in controlling the pest at the various seasons of the year. This cycle is shown graphically in the chart which accompanies this article. The larvae or worms winter in cocoons in old pruning wounds, under the bark, in trays, or in any convenient place that offers protection against winter rains. About the first of April, pupation starts and by the middle of June is usually completed. Weather conditions have much to do with determining the length of time required to complete the various stages in the life cycle, cold weather lengthening it, and warm weather shortening the period. The time spent in the pupal stage ranges from eighteen to thirty days.

APPEAR IN APRIL

The first moths generally appear about April 15, and in normal seasons, the period of maximum emergence of the moths is about June 1. In the present season, it appears to be slightly earlier than this for most sections. The eggs of the first brood are generally laid from May 15 until June 5 These eggs hatch in from four to ten days, depending upon weather conditions. The first worms are usually to be found on the nuts and branches near the nuts early in June. Entrance to the nuts is usually gained through the stem end and later, as the shell begins to harden, at the point of contact between two nuts in a cluster. The worms remain in the nuts on an average of about thirty-five days.

A majority of the first brood of worms leave the nuts rather early in the season and spin cocoons preparatory to forming the second brood. Moths from these cocoons, the eggs of which were laid in the spring, begin to emerge in the latter part of June and continue more or less throughout the remainder of the season, with a maximum emergence toward the middle of July. These moths lay eggs on the nuts and by the first week in August, another brood of worms is actively at work. In some seasons, this second brood is much more numerous than the first and, while it is too late for the worms to get through the shell of the nut except at the base, the high percentage of culls is caused by the larvae feeding on the husks and staining the shells.

There is considerable overlapping of broods in many sections, so that moths, eggs and worms may be found present from the first of June on until harvest is completed, and occasionally there is even a third brood of worms in late September.

PERIODS FOR CONTROL

From a consideration of the life cycle and an examination of the chart which depicts the same, it is apparent that spraying or dusting should be done at the periods when the largest numbers of eggs are just hatching. Following the first application of spray materials, where a second application is to be made, best results will probably be had if this is attended to in the latter part of July, or toward the first of August. The exact period when application should be made, however, can be determined, experts agree, only by careful observation of the nuts. Walnut growers should make frequent inspections of the nuts and twigs, preferably on the trees about the drying yards, beginning not later than May 15 and continuing on through the season. The eggs are readily detected by a close examination. When first laid, they are small, whitish, transparent objects, about the size of a pinhead, and resemble a small blister. Within a few days, a pinkish ring appears just within the outer circumference and, just before hatching, a black spot, which is the head of the young worm, may be seen under the shell in the center of the egg.

MATERIALS USED

Basic lead arsenate is the poison recommended for use and it may be applied either in the dust form or liquid form. There is some evidence to indicate that slightly better control is secured from liquid spraying, especially on large trees. By a combination of two dustings, many growers feel, however, that very satisfactory results are secured. The amounts of lead arsenate recommended are: for the dust, 15 per cent, and for the liquid spray, 12 pounds of basic lead arsenate to 300 gallons of water. From 6 to 10 pounds of dust per tree is required for average to large-sized trees, and from 15 to 35 gallons of spray, depending upon the size of the trees. While the application of poison to the surface is the primary method of control, many growers have felt that results secured by additional control measures in the form of banding the trees, dipping the trays, and cleaning up the orchard, these latter being done generally in the fall months, are also worth while.

While the codlin moth was not reported as attacking walnuts in California until 1909, and did not become a matter of concern until 1917, during recent years this pest has reached the point where in the opinion of many walnut growers, it constitutes one of the principal handicaps to the industry. It was not until 1922 that it became of sufficient importance in Los Angeles county to warrant control measures, although prior to that time it had become a serious factor in other walnut-producing sections.

A county-wide campaign to control the pest during the present season was outlined some months ago, providing for co-operation between the Agricultural Extension Service

Dusting for Codlin Moth in a Southland Walnut Orchard

CAN THE NEMATODE FAMILY BE MADE TO SERVE AGRICULTURE?

IF ALL the substance of the earth and of the things that flourish on it, with the exception of the threadlike organisms known as nemas, could by a stroke of magic be made invisible, it would still be possible to distinguish the soil-covered parts of the earth, the streams, lakes and oceans, the insects, animals, birds, fishes, plants and humans. So widespread and abundant are these nemas, largely parasitic or predaceous, that in this imagined world of transparencies most living things, the blanket of soil on mountains, hills and plains, and the bodies of water would be indicated by clouds of these living threads which vary in length from a small fraction of an inch to several feet, and in diameter from that of the finest of hairs to the thickness of a lead pencil.

With this fanciful picture Dr. N. A. Cobb, plant pathologist and nematologist of the United States Department of Agriculture, one of the leading authorities of the world on nematodes, calls attention to the abundance of these organisms, which are of untold economic importance to agriculture and to medicine. Certain species of them are responsible for crop diseases which cut the country's food-producing capacity to an extent, which, if it could be measured, would be startling and discouraging, according to this authority. One species, the gall nema, attacks about 500 different kinds of plants, making galls or knots on the roots which frequently prevent the plant from producing a profitable crop. Very few plants are free from such attack, not even weeds which are often thought to be blest with immunity from enemies; but the grasses including the small grains and corn, are less subject to devastation than most of the others.

By using these resistant crops in a rotation, it is possible to keep down the number of the pests in the soil as the nematodes will die out in large numbers if a crop, undesirable from their standpoint, is grown on the ground for a year or two. It is necessary, however, to keep down the weeds, because the nemas live in the roots of a large number of them. Even a weed that is not badly infested will carry over the infection from year to year, and it does not take long for a few of the pests to repopulate the soil when a susceptible crop is growing in it. Allowing two months to each generation, which seems to be ample, a pair of gall nemas will have five to ten million descendants in six months, should all survive.

These root-knot producers do the most damage in a light, sandy soil, as it is easier for them to make their way through it from root to root and they are moved about more readily by the flow of soil water. In real heavy clay soils the pest is sometimes of little importance, though it may exist there. Sometimes it becomes worse when a soil is lightened up by adding manure or by opening it with green crops turned under and by thorough cultivation. These destroyers are a real problem in Southern California, as in other sections of the count try, efforts at nematode control being one of the leading activities of farm bureaus and other agricultural agencies.

ATTACKS VARIETY OF CROPS

Among the many crops attacked by the root-knot nematode the most important, according to Dr. Cobb, are alfalfa, clover, cotton, cow peas (with the exception of a few varieties,) field peas, flax, fig, grape, peach, soy beans (with the exception of the Laredo variety,) pumpkins, sugar beets, sugar cane, sweet potatoes, tobacco, vetch, a large number of truck crops, ornamental plants and trees. Some of the plants attacked are legumes which normally have nodules produced by beneficial bacteria; but usually it is not difficult, he says, to distinguish between these growths and those thickenings on the roots made by the gall nematode. The former are more or less globular and easily removed, while the latter are usually club-shaped or irregular

SOLVING A COMMON BROODING PROBLEM

By L. C. BOGGS, Extension Poultryman, University of Arizona.

It is a source of great worry to poultrymen to know just what age their chicks should be before they can remove the heat from the brooder house. That question is asked many times in connection with brooding and there is no definite answer, as there are several factors to consider, such as the age of chicks, the weather, the type of brooder house and the age at which the chicks were started to perch.

Usually, about the time a chick weighs about one-half pound it begins to look for something high to jump on. This is especially true of the light breeds. That is the time to put the small chick roosts in the house and start them sleeping on the roosts at night instead of on the floor. At this age the droppings from the chicks accumulate quite rapidly and make it very unsanitary for the chick to lie on the floor all night. If the night turns cold and there is no heat in the brooder stove, the chicks will pile up in the corners and some will be smothered to death.

Now, to get away from all this trouble, build chick roosts in sections, so that they can be removed when necessary. They should be about twelve inches from the floor, with the front part sloped off to the floor so as to make an incline for the chicks to run up on. The best material to use for the roosts is parting-strips about one-half by three-fourths inches in dimension and well rounded off on top. The roosts can be placed about six inches apart. On the under side of these roosts, tack one-half-inch mesh wire to keep the chick from falling through. This one-half-inch mesh wire is more expensive than the one-inch mesh, but in a year's time the number of chicks crippled from the use of the coarser wire will pay for the extra cost of the former. When ordering, ask for light one-half-inch mesh sand screen.

In starting the chicks onto these first roosts, it is a good plan to raise the hover and keep up the temperature in the room so that they are comfortable on the roosts away from the hover. After the chicks have learned to perch, raise the roosts up on blocks to get them used to perching at a greater height, thus preparing them for the permanent roosts.

Do not remove the heat from the brooder until all the chicks have learned to perch and then in case of a cold night, a little fire will add much to the comfort of the chicks and lessen the chance of their chilling. House and brood your chickens to take care of the extremes in weather and not the average conditions.

"SWEETS" DESTROYED

Several shipments of plants and plant products originating in portions of the United States against which California maintains a quarantine because of the danger of importing Sweet Potato Weevil into this State, have been taken in quarantine recently by Los Angeles County Horticultural Quarantine Inspectors. P. K. Wilson, quarantine inspector stationed at Los Angeles, recently intercepted a shipment of sweet potatoes from Louisiana, which is one of the States covered by the California quarantine and where this pest is not only present, but has caused enormous loss to sweet potato growers. According to the Horticultural Commissioner's office, sweet potato weevil would prove a very serious pest on plantings of this vegetable in Los Angeles county, if it should become introduced. The shipment in question was destroyed.

this spring. It was estimated that twenty-three hundred feet of ditch was cemented last year, which added to activities of this year, give four miles of cemented ditch in all. It is planned to treat the entire canal in the same manner as soon as possible. This ditch is 10 miles long and furnishes water to a large proportion of the ranch holdings in this Tulare county district. Wells have been used each year on some ranches during the extremely hot weather, but a larger volume of irrigation water is expected this season in view of the improved condition of the ditch. Four new corrugated iron flumes, built this spring, are other valuable improvements. Assessments of $14 each have been levied upon district members to pay for these new improvements.

NEW WATER REGULATIONS

VAN NUYS.—Aside from allotting eight inches of irrigation water for 21,000 acres of truck crops in the San Fernando Valley, the new allocation of Los Angeles Aqueduct water makes more liberal provision for producing crops than was possible under the rule in force before repairs to the reservoir temporarily removed all restrictions. Under the new order, citrus orchards will receive from 8 to 24 inches, according to the age of the trees; deciduous trees from 8 to 9 inches; walnuts, 8 to 18 inches; nursery stock, 18 inches; olives, 6 inches; alfalfa, 14 inches; asparagus, 18 inches; berries, 24 inches; grapes, 6 inches; roses and bulbs, 14 inches; sugar beets, 19 inches and beans, potatoes and truck, 8 inches.

PLANTING SEASON ON

SANTA FE PARK.—Nurserymen have signed contracts to deliver 16,000 avocado trees and 22,000 citrus trees for planting on the Santa Fe ranch. Planting is proceeding as rapidly as deliveries permit. Since the first of January this year sixty acres have been planted to avocados, thirty acres to walnuts and five acres to citrus. Because of a probable nursery-stock shortage, the Santa Fe Company agricultural directors have ordered 300 acres planted to potatoes and signed contracts to plant 700 acres in tomatoes. The tomatoes will be set out about June 10.

GOOD YEAR FOR OLIVES

LINDSAY.—Despite the "off year," the 1924 olive season in Tulare county has been highly successful, according to officials of the Lindsay Ripe Olive Association and others interested in the local industry. Tulare county has 6000 of California's 32,000 acres of olives. Olive men declare general marketing conditions for the fruit during the past year were all that could have been expected under existing conditions and that few growers have cause for complaint. Complete figures in Tulare county have not yet been turned in, but no large hold-over pack is anticipated. The new crop is some months distant, but considerable new acreage was planted this spring, and close to 100 additional acres will come into bearing next winter when the new crop is harvested.

GRAPE CROP NORMAL

BAKERSFIELD.—While only half of the normal apricot crop is expected this season for Kern county, indications are that the grape crop will be normal, according to the Kern County Horticultural Commissioner's office. Preliminary vineyard surveys indicate that the grape crop will be up to the average, if not better. Early examinations have disclosed no evidence of mildew, the lack of which has been attributed to the extra precautionary measures taken by vineyardists this year to prevent a recurrence of the slight blight which was in evidence last season. With only half an apricot crop expected, growers are reported to be optimistic, contending that the lessened supply will increase the demand with a corresponding increase in price. At this time express shipments are leaving the Magunden and Edison districts, chiefly for Los Angeles markets.

OFFERS ENCOURAGING

VISALIA.—Offers as high as $90 per ton have been made for the peach crop in this section this year. One grower reports having accepted such an offer, while others report having received bids of $70 per ton. This comes in spite of the fact that the crop this season is said to be far better locally than last year, and is believed due to the fact that peaches in some other sections of the State were damaged by frost. It is not held that these figures will represent the final average, as the season is yet young, but the situation is most encouraging to growers. Ninety dollars per ton has also been offered for Emperor grapes though no sales have been reported as yet. An offer of $35 per ton for Thompsons was recently reported. Independent prune buyers are said to be scouting in the Tulare county field. The prune crop here promises to amount to about 50 per cent of normal, but the fruit gives indication of being of better size than last season.

masses, really enlargements of the roots and rootlets themselves.

When the soil freezes large numbers of the nematodes are killed off and, as a consequence, the pest is not so bad in the Northern States as in the Southern. However, enough of the organisms get down below the frost line so that they never are annihilated. In greenhouses they become bad pests in any parts of the country, but by treating the soil with hot water or steam it is possible to destroy them along with fungi and many undesirable bacteria. It is now recommended by authorities that new greenhouses be constructed in the first place with tile or pipes in the beds with a view to steaming.

Although nemas exist in enormous numbers and kinds in the soil and are of great importance in crop production, there are important species which infest different animals, insects and man. The hookworm is a nema, and there is one infesting the fox which is blood red in color and attains a length of several feet. Investigations are being made by the department to learn if these parasites can be used to combat certain insects of economic importance. It has been found that a certain nema has a predilection for grasshoppers, and Dr. Cobb is of the opinion that it is this enemy, in some cases, which causes the "hopper" scourge to rise and subside in great waves. This nema, which attains a length of twenty inches or more and is about the thickness of a coarse thread, is said to make the host insect sterile and in that way reduces the increase enormously. When the "hoppers" become plentiful the parasites increase and cut down their numbers; then, through lack of grasshoppers, the nemas decrease, and the cycle repeats. Investigators are now trying to find out if it will be practicable to introduce this particular nema in regions where the "hoppers" are not infested and in that way help protect the crops.

A Dangerous Pest.

Nematode galls on sugar beets. This pest attacks a large number of trees and plants.

HAVE ECONOMIC POSSIBILITIES

There are many other possibilities for utilizing these natural enemies in the interest of the farmer, Dr. Cobb says. There is a nema parasite infecting the cucumber beetle and a study is being made of the problem of introducing them in localities where this beetle is abundant and not already badly infested. Practically all the injurious insects and the beneficial ones as well are thought to have their nemas, and it is thought possible that some day these parasites will be used for the benefit of humans just as insect parasites of insects are now being used in efforts to control such economic pests as the Japanese beetle, the European corn borer and various caterpillars.

In the soil and in water there are nemas which prey on other species of their own kind and it is hoped that some day it may be possible to increase the numbers of those predatory nemas which prey on the economically destructive ones.

The field of nematology is one which it is thought may be cultivated with a great deal of promise for the farmer. It is certain that much more work must be done in the control of those that are reducing the yield of crops, particularly that widespread one which produces root-knot on so many valuable plants.

BERMUDA GRASS POPULAR

YUMA (Ariz.)—Bermuda grass seed has become a staple product of the Yuma Valley, though large acreages of the grass are being plowed up and the land seeded in alfalfa. The grass seed especially is in demand in Texas and the Southern States, where it is used largely in seeding the banks of levees. Locally, it no longer is considered a pest, as it is readily eradicated by deep and cross plowing. It has been found valuable in enrichment of the soil.

DOWN-TO-DATE REPORTS FROM TIMES CORRESPONDENTS

TULARE.—Certification of eggs, similar to that for milk, may be undertaken in the near future in Tulare county, considerable local interest having been displayed in such a plan. Tulare and Porterville poultry associations handle the bulk of the eggs of the county and would, it is declared, be the best medium through which to undertake such an enterprise. Advocates of the plan declare is would aid in creation of a greater market for eggs. Attendent expenses it is expected, would add somewhat to the retail price as it does to the retail price of milk, but the advocates declare that the guarantee of fresh eggs would stimulate the demand. Poultry raising in general has materially increased in Tulare county and it is believed the certified idea for eggs is worth trying.

PEACHES IN LEAF

ONTARIO.—Peach trees in the big deciduous fruit growing districts south and east of this city have finally begun to leaf out and fruit growers are more optimistic over crop prospects. If these leaves come out well before the hot weather comes on, growers say that a good crop will be assured.

GROWERS WANT INSPECTION

EL CENTRO.—Watermelon growers in Imperial Valley agreed to pay an assessment of 50 cents an acre with which to raise a fund to employ inspectors this year. This was decided upon at a meeting attended by growers representing 1800 acres of the 2300 acres in the valley planted to watermelons this season. Imperial County Horticultural Commissioner B. A. Harrigan informed the growers that this season only excelsior may be used in covering the floors of watermelon cars because of the regulations in Eastern States prohibiting the shipment of hay and straw from California. The railroad companies have been asked to provide refrigerator cars for watermelon shipments, as stock cars which have hitherto been used for this purpose cannot be fumigated properly.

FIRST "COTS" MOVE

BAKERSFIELD.—Kern county's first shipment of apricots moved from the Kern Mesa district, May 19 and was consigned to Los Angeles markets. The shipment consisted of 25 lugs of the early New Castle variety. According to Kern County Horticultural Commissioner Harold L. Pomeroy, the apricot crop this year is being estimated at about half of what it was for 1923. He says that the bulk of the crop in the county will be moved from the Kern Mesa, Weed Patch, Shafter, Lerdo and Famosa districts. Following the early New Castle fruit will be the Royals and Tiltons. The commissioner also declared markets will accept fruit from this county in used lugs and without certification and that later fruit will be moved throughout the State without inspection.

EXPERT ADVISES GROWERS

SANTA BARBARA.—Advising against top pruning where frost has hit a lemon grove, W. R. Schoonover, citrus expert from the State agricultural department, has just completed a survey of the lemon groves Carpinteria valley and States that the trees caught in the low temperature of last winter, when the mercury dropped to 24 degrees, have completely recovered from the effects of the freeze, and are in splendid shape. "The best thing for a grower to do is to let the trees alone and permit nature to do its work," the expert declared, as he called attention to the flourishing condition of lemon trees that were nipped and then allowed to go without being topped.

JOINT BUREAU MEETING

ORANGE.—The joint meeting of the Villa Park and El Modena farm centers recently held here, was one of the best attended in recent months. Not only were members of the two centers present, but practically every farm center in Orange County had representatives in attendance. The principal speaker of the evening was H. J. Quayle, of the University of California Station, at Riverside, who recently returned from extensive study of agricultural conditions in Australia. He described agricultural pursuits in that country comparing them with those found here.

BIG PEACH CROP

REDLANDS. — According to reports brought here by cannery men who have been making contracts, this district and vicinity have a much better peach crop than any other section of Southern California. In the Mission district here there is an excellent crop of peaches on the trees but the trees do not have their customary coat of leaves. If these leaves do not come out soon, the fruit will be sunburned and much of it lost, the growers say. In the Greenspot district, where J. H. Hale peaches are grown, there will be one of the largest crops yet taken from the trees. A large force of men is now being engaged in thinning this crop. In the district proper, there is a good crop, but here also the trees are lacking in leaves, a condition that has not yet been satisfactorily explained. In the Yucaipa district there is a good crop of fruit, both early and late peaches. Much of the fruit grown there is choice and is sold to the markets in Los Angeles, little of it going to the canneries.

Wants Quality Fruit.

This Riverside county orchardist is doing a careful job of thinning inhis apricot trees.

SPINACH PACK COMPLETED

SAN FERNANDO.—During the twenty-nine days through which the spinach crop was being packed, the Fernandos Canning Company handled 15,000 cases of this vegetable, containing 360,000 quart cans. The crop brought the growers $30,000 and an additional $12,000 was paid to laborers at the plant, according to Manager W. F. Herman who says that the cannery expects to open on apricots about June 25, following in turn with peaches, and winding up the season with the tomato crop. This run will be of about four months' duration, he says, with employment being given to about 250 persons when the pack is at its peak.

DOES WELL WITH CABBAGE

CALIPATRIA—An average of four tons of cabbage to the acre was grown this year by A. A. Gibson, who has a ranch near here. The seed was planted in rows in the field about October 1 and after the plants came up they were thinned to eighteen inches apart. They were irrigated and cultivated at regular intervals and about January 1 the cutting was started. Since then, Mr. Gibson has been supplying the merchants with solid cabbage, which averaged three to four pounds to the head, a good size for the retail trade. The price received was from 4 to 6 cents per pound, Mr. Gibson says.

TO FIX HAY GRADES

PHOENIX, (Ariz.)—W. A. Wheeler, chief of the hay, feed-and-seed division of the United States Bureau of Agricultural Economics, and R. E. Hathaway of the same department recently held a conference here with hay growers and dealers of the Salt River Valley. The object of this meeting was to discuss the establishment of official grades of hay shipped from valley points and to provide official inspection. Some difficulty has been encountered by local growers by reason of varying hay standards in different parts of the country, resulting in complications at receiving points, when a difference develops between the local and outside grading.

READY FOR IRRIGATION

SUCCESS.—With the annual cleaning and the cementing of nearly four miles of the South Tule ditch, local ranchers are in a position to receive a full lead of water at the beginning of the irrigating season

UNIVERSITY MAN TO DIRECT LABORATORY

TUCSON (Ariz.)—F. J. Crider, head of the department of horticulture of the University of Arizona for the past six years, has resigned to become director of an extensive plant laboratory which is being started by Col. W. B. Thompson, millionaire copper magnate, at Superior, Ariz. Mr. Crider will take up his new work on September 1.

Mr. Crider is one of the best known fruit men in Arizona and also has a wide acquaintance on the Pacific Coast. He is largely responsible for the development of the grape industry in this State and has done much to encourge citrus and date growing. In his new work, it is said, he will have practically unlimited financial support.

The laboratory at Superior will be known as the Boyce-Thompson Southwestern Aboretum and will be given over to the study and improvement of both native and imported plants. Col. Thompson says he is establishing the project for the purpose of benefiting southwestern farmers and fruit growers.

One of the first objectives at the Arizona plant research laboratory will be the assembling of the largest collection of cacti in the world. The Carnegie Institute and the Smithsonian Institution at Washington have collections of cacti from all parts of the world which have been donated to Col. Thompson's aboretum and will be brought to it next fall. There are more than 1200 species of cacti in these collections, it is said.

When fully developed, the aboretum will embrace an area with a circumference of more than six miles around the Thompson winter residence just outside of the mining town of Superior. It is planned to make the aboretum one of the beauty spots in Arizona.

During the summer the work of supervising the university experiment stations in the Salt River Valley and at Yuma will fall on the shoulders of D. W. Albert, assistant to Mr. Crider in the horticultural department.

EXPERT DISCUSSES DAIRY SITUATION

BAKERSFIELD.—Discussing the dairy situation in Kern county recently, L. W. Taylor, assistant farm advisor, said: "There has been some discussion in the county concerning the slow growth of the dairy industry. Dairying has long been known as a stable reliable form of agriculture and a business which builds up a community. The question of why the business has not grown more rapidly in Kern county cannot be answered all in one breath but some of the factors can be pointed out.

"The real reason why dairying has not advanced more rapidly is probably because the returns have not warranted the expansion. Dairying has not paid sufficiently in comparison with other forms of agriculture. The dairy survey made in 1922 by Prof. H. L. Adams of the University of California showed that the average dairyman in Kern county was just breaking even on the production of milk and butter fat and that, nine out of sixteen dairies studied were producing at a loss. In those studies the farmer's time was figured at the going rate for farm labor and the interest on his investment was figured at 6 per cent.

"In going over the summarized figures in relationship to the individual dairies studied it is apparent that the successful dairies, those that have made money, are the ones that have been systematically and scientifically managed and that have labored under a comparatively small overhead. In this the dairy business is no different from any other business. These facts indicate that the success for the dairy business in Kern county rests first with the dairyman and second with certain economic conditions under which he operates.

"With the dairyman himself rests the responsibility of operating his plant as economically as possible. His cows must be good cows to begin with. They must be bred right. They must make good as individuals. Testing their production will determine that. They must be held at maximum economic production. This is accomplished by proper feeding and management. There is nothing new in any of these principles. The proof of them all can be found in the county.

"In one small locality in this county where conditions are almost identical, a study of six herds, three of which are high-bred and three of no particular breeding, reveals the following: For the month of January, 1924, the three ordinary herds totaling forty-one cows produced an average of 13.4 pounds of butter fat per cow. The three high-bred herds with a total of 39 cows produced an average of 48.3 pounds of butter fat per cow. The high-bred cows produced 34.9 pounds of butter fat more than the ordinary cows in the same length of time. The value of the surplus product was $22.34 per cow for the month. One cow, a pure-bred, produced 107 pounds of butter fat during the month, returning to her owner $2.30 per day gross, or about $1.70 per day net. It is not always feasible to start out with a pure-bred herd, but any dairyman can buy a pure-bred bull and make a start toward better stock.

"For three years a cow-testing association has been operating in this county to help dairymen to discover their unprofitable cows and to give them a proper basis for culling their herds down to the profitable individuals. On an average it costs about $130.00 per year to feed, house and care for a cow in Kern county. Obviously then, at an average price of 50 cents per pound, it is necessary for a cow to produce 260 pounds of butter fat a year in order to break even. The average cow in California produced about 195 pounds of butter fat a year, which indicates that cows here must be better than average to pay their way.

"The economical feeding of dairy cows consists in feeding a ration that is suited to the needs of the individual animal in sufficient quantities to get maximum economic production. The balancing of rations can be easily learned. Feeding problems here with alfalfa as a basis are easy compared to other parts of the country, but for that reason they have been slighted. A change in feeding practice on one dairy of sixty-seven cows raised the net income from the herd by $250 per month in one month's time as shown by the creamery tags.

If the farmer is to succeed in the dairy business he must organize his business in this line with these general principles. If the dairy business as a whole is to thrive in this county and become an asset to the county, it must receive help and encouragement from those who do business with and for the dairymen.

"With the co-operation and encouragement of the agencies with whom he deals and with an earnest effort on the part of the dairyman himself the dairy industry could and will prosper in Kern county."

POULTRYMEN ENCOURAGED

BRYN MAWR.—Poultrymen are much encouraged over the condition of their flocks, as the hens are laying much better than they did early in the year, with the return of normal weather conditions. The dry weather of January and February, mixed with so many electrical storms, did not form ideal conditions for the hens and as a result, the laying was well under 50 per cent when it should have been above that. Little chicks that did not grow well are coming out in fine shape now.

SMALLER TURKEY HATCH

SUCCESS.—D. O. Schauff and Leon Price, poultry dealers of the coast district, while on a tour of poultry-producing localities in Tulare county to ascertain present prospects of fowl production, visited the Success district. They declare that a smaller percentage of turkeys is being hatched this spring in many localities, owing to unsatisfactory market conditions during the past two years, especially at holiday times. They advise, however, that the commercial producer continue as usual as they are optimistic regarding market conditions, predicting a return to normal within at least two seasons. They anticipate a better "line-up" for this season.

DISEASES CAUSE LOSS

Diseases of the potato in California cause an annual loss ranging between 25 and 30 per cent of the crop, according to D. G. Milbrath, Plant Pathologist, California Department of Agriculture. This loss occurs both in the field and after digging, and when interpreted in actual money value amounts to approximately $2,500,000 on a normal planting of 70,000 acres, he says.

Increased Acreage

to have been the largest ever paid for citrus acreage in the State.

According to Manager I. de R. Miller of the Arizona Citrus Growers Company, about 20,000 citrus trees will be added to the valley's acreage next spring, constituting a 10 per cent addition. It is estimated that 200,000 seedling trees, both of grapefruit and oranges, are being grown in the Salt River Valley this year. The valley's Valencia crop is now being cleaned up. It is small, but the fruit is of good quality.

CROPS SHOW PROMISE IN LOMPOC VALLEY

LOMPOC.—Irrigation will soon play an important part in the agricultural development throughout Lompoc Valley. In all sections of the valley, wells have been drilled and pumping plants installed. Many of the plants will be operated through the summer by electricity for the first time. Test runs on most of the wells show an abundance of water, though along the Santa Ynez River where wells have been pumped continuously, the water table has dropped considerably and the prediction is that under heavy summer irrigation the river might go dry. This will not materially affect a majority of the wells, local men say.

The big crop in the valley this year will be sugar beets. Many of the fields have just had their first thinning and are being irrigated. Others will require irrigation before the beets can be thinned. In every section where beets are grown, the crop is said to be looking unusually good. Both the Union Sugar Company of Betteravia and the American Sugar Beet Company of Oxnard are engaged in the growing of beets in the valley, the latter company for the first time this year.

Another big crop will be mustard. The mustard fields, which cover a wider area this year than in many years passed, have made considerable growth during the past few weeks and show prospects of an average crop.

The sweet pea crop will also return goodly profit, growers say. Where fields have been irrigated the sweet peas are blossoming out well, and showing a luxuriant growth, yet it is admitted that this year's crop will not come up to the standard of more propitious seasons. The Burpees are making a good showing with the peas on the Frank Huyck place and the Bodgers are equally successful in the sweet pea development on their big farm along the Bailey road.

A survey of the valley's crop outlook brings the opinion that the crop returns are to be unusually extensive in the face of the fact that the total rainfall for the winter season has been little over five inches, as against three times that amount, usually expected. There will be some small white beans harvested and some grain also, but the major crops this year will be sugar beets and mustard, and because of excellent market conditions, the growers are counting on a prosperous year.

While these annual crops are covering a considerable area, there is also a growing acreage being put out to lettuce, tomatoes and other vegetables, which attract the interest of landowners from the city of Lompoc to Surf, a distance of over ten miles. The first carload of lettuce ever shipped from the Lompoc shipping station went to the east this month, being grown on the Smiley farm in the Santa Rita district and the George Sanor farm in the valley proper. There are about 200 acres out to lettuce in the valley, harvesting is now in full swing.

SHIPMENTS AHEAD OF LAST SEASON'S

RIVERSIDE.—Citrus shipments from the Riverside district have exceeded 3000 cars during the naval season, nearly 300 cars ahead of the shipments to date last season. One of the biggest naval seasons in the history of the district is now drawing to a close, and Valencias will soon hold the stage.

Lemon shipments are now taking a big jump, running on a average of more than 20 cars per week. The season, to May 10, had totaled 169 cars of lemons, but it was predicted that the shipments would continue big from then on. Warm weather in the East is quickening the demand for lemons.

Valencia shipments, according to packers, promise to hold up as well as have those of navels ,and there is hope of a good season ahead. The Valencias are of good quality.

URGES LATE THINNING

TUCSON, (Ariz.)—Agronomist B. J. Showers of the University of Arizona says that farmers should not thin their cotton immediately but that they should wait until it has attained a height of from eight to twelve inches. Then the plants can be thinned to about ten inches apart in the row on new land and fourteen inches apart on older land, he says.

ADVANCES REASON FOR CROP SHORTAGE

CUCAMONGA.—A prediction that the Southland's deciduous fruit crop will be less than 20 per cent of normal was recently made by F. A. Lucas, who has a large acreage of fruit in this district. Mr. Lucas ascribes the impending crop shortage to warm weather experienced last February. "During the hot spell," he said, "the sap in the trees started flowing. Budding began, virtually all of the trees leafing, and when the colder weather returned, the flow of sap was halted, killing the foliage.

"Trees on my property now have peaches and apricots as large as walnuts, but there are few leaves on the trees. Leaves to trees are what lungs are to human beings and feed the fruit. The condition is one of the most serious that fruit growers have experienced in recent years. I do not expect more than a 15 per cent crop on my trees and other fruit growers make the same complaint."

Not only is this year's crop menaced, but limbs on the trees for next year are not budding because of the absence of sap and leaves, the fruit grower added.

A high stool in the kitchen is a back-saver; and so is a low chair with a comfortable back.

CALIFORNIA WEATHER AND CROP SUMMARY

Little cause for optimism is to be found in the weather and crop reports for the first two weeks of May, as droughty conditions were then still prevalent in nearly all parts of California. Pastures declined and grain crops suffered very seriously from the lack of moisture. Weather conditions for the development of fruit were favorable, however, but all available irrigation water was brought to use, as a limited late summer supply is predicted, especially in sections dependent upon gravity flow. Snow disappeared rapidly from the mountains and all streams are below normal.

In his report issued May 16, E. E. Kaufman, agricultural statistician, California Co-operative Crop Reporting Service, summarizing May conditions to that time as follows:

"Temperatures during the first week were generally above normal, while during the second week they were more nearly seasonal. Many localities report two or three days of unseasonably warm weather accompanied by drying winds that absorbed much of the small amount of moisture present in the surface soil. Along the coast there was considerable foggy weather. Scattered showers occurred on May 12 in the Sacramento Valley and northern part of the San Joaquin Valley, but these were generally too light to be of any appreciable value to growing crops. In Sonoma, Mendocino and Napa counties the rainfall was a little heavier and of some benefit, especially to pasture and grain.

"In Southern California the ranges are in a fair condition due to rainfall being heavier there than elsewhere since the latter part of March. Pasture on the valley and foothill ranges north of the Tehachapi is poor and even on some of the higher ranges grass is already showing the effects of the persistent dry weather. Much wheat and barley, particularly the late sown, have been abandoned for grain and is being cut for hay or pastured where it is too poor for hay. Live stock is faring very well considering the poor condition of pasture the past winter and spring. Many cattle and sheep men, in those districts where quarantine regulations do not prevent the movement of live stock, are now moving or preparing to move their herds to mountain ranges, which are earlier than usual.

"There has been no rain of any consequence in the Sacramento Valley for more than a month and a drying northerly wind materially reduced grain prospects compared with early season indications. Small grains are mostly in a poor condition except on the lowlands, where the soil is more retentive of moisture. It is expected that fairly good yields will be harvested from these more favored localities. Practically all grain plantings under rainfall conditions in the San Joaquin Valley will not produce grain except in the northeastern part of the valley. All irrigated grain will produce very favorable yields. Conditions similar to those prevailing in the San Joaquin Valley exist in the central coastal counties where large areas of grain are generally grown. Most grain fields in Southern California will mature a fair harvest, due to the effect of late March and early April rains that followed the very adverse conditions which prevailed earlier in the season."

Other reports for the first two weeks of May indicate that spring vegetable shipments declined and that summer crops had begun to ripen, notably Imperial Valley cantaloupes. Olives and grapes flowered, and vineyards were sulphured as a precaution against mildew. Oranges bloomed profusely and set fruit well, the weather being favorable for citrus fruits. Late walnuts bloomed and early varieties were found to have set good crops. The picking of cherries and berries continued and good supplies of both were found on the markets. Among field crops, alfalfa grew well and some second cuttings were taken. Planting of rice and sugar beets proceeded. In Imperial Valley cotton was benefited by warm weather.

INSUFFICIENT USE OF WATER CITED

Some very amazing figures have been compiled by W. B. DeNure, district manager, Department of Public Service at Van Nuys, in regard to the use of irrigation water in San Fernando Valley during the months of March and April. These figures tend to show that during a period of the year when the soils of that valley were actually dry, not more than one acre inch was used by the growers. Mr. De Nure's statement as follows:

"I have just completed a check on the use of irrigation water for apricots, peaches and walnuts during the months of March and April, the result of which is very illuminating to say the least. In the Van Nuys district, which comprises an acreage of 3233 acres on apricots, peaches, and other deciduous trees and 3027 acres in walnuts, there was a total use of water amounting to $3197.85 on 6270 acres, an average of 50 cents an acre, which represents exactly one-acre inch. There was 60 cents an acre used on apricots and peaches and 40 cents on walnuts. This was in the face of the fact that there was an unrestricted use of water during April.

These figures are food for thought for the deciduous-fruit growers of the San Fernando Valley, orchard experts say. They indicate, it is pointed out, one reason why so many growers in the valley have not secured satisfactory results in the growing of fruits. Irrigation water is a necessity, especially during the period of drouth, and attention is called to the fact that the district has passed through two years of half normal rainfall and that soils have been dry for the greater part of that time. During such a period is possible for trees to become so shocked and weakened that it will take some years for recovery, the orchard authorities say. They add that it would be well for the future prosperity of deciduous fruit growers if they would attempt to maintain healthy trees by supplying an adequate amount of irrigation water.

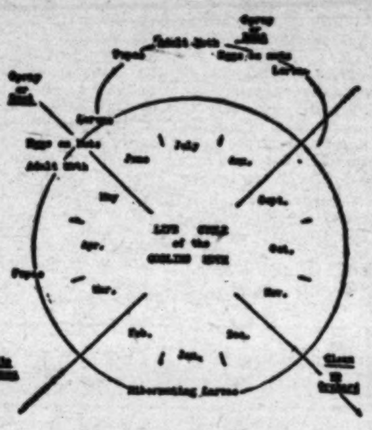
and the Horticultural Commissioner's office. All the walnut-producing sections of Los Angeles county have been accurately mapped during recent weeks with reference to codlin-moth infestation, and through the local walnut growers' associations, arrangements were completed for an extensive spraying and dusting campaign to be launched at the time when control measures should be recommended by the entomologist co-operating. It is expected that by a concerted effort, the pest will undoubtedly be kept under good control and will be prevented from increasing to the serious extent to which it exists in other walnut-producing countries of the world.



It's All in the Chart.

"JUNE BUDDING" AS A TIME-SAVING PLAN

By M. J. HEPPNER, Division of Pomology, University of California

"June budding" does not, as the term might imply, necessarily mean budding that is done during the month of June, although this is the conception most fruit growers have. Instead, it refers to budding done usually during the early summer, the bud growing the same season. In other words, the process of budding completed, growth commences soon after. It so happens in most sections of the State that budding is best done during the month of June. However, in other sections late May may be the best time and in still others, July. The time to do "June budding" will vary with the year and the condition of the stock.

Although success can be had when employing "June budding" on all deciduous fruit trees, best results are obtained with the peach. The writer has had success in "June budding" of apricots, apples, almonds and pears, the budding having been done in July.

The chief advantage of "June budding" lies in the fact that a fruit tree can be propagated from seed to readiness for orchard planting in one year's time, while if a bud was inserted in late summer, according to the usual practice, a second season would be necessary for it to grow into a tree. The root of a "June-budded" tree is only one year old, while the root of a fall-budded tree is two years old at the time of planting in the orchard. The advantage of the one-year root is that it is smaller and that more of it therefore remains intact when removed from the nursery takes place.

There are three requisites for "June budding:"

1. The seedlings must be large enough early in the season to be budded conveniently.
2. The bark must slip readily.
3. The desired dormant buds must be available. Sometimes they are not mature enough to use in May or early June.

The budding operation does not differ from any other budding. The securing of bud wood is often difficult owing to the earliness of the growing season. However, it has been found that buds can be made to mature earlier by "ringing" the branches.

About ten days after the bud has been inserted, the string holding it in place should be cut so as not to cut the rapidly-growing tree. Immediately after cutting, the seedling should be bent over and broken about four inches above the bud. Care should be taken not to completely sever this top portion, but to allow a few strands of wood to remain intact. Complete removal of this portion of the tree at this time will cause the bud to be "drowned out" owing to too much sap going to the bud. As soon as the bud has started to grow vigorously, the top should be cut off about one-half inch above the growing bud. Given the proper conditions, the young tree should be large enough to plant in the orchard the following winter.

CONTROL WORK HALTED

VISALIA—Rodent control work in Tulare county has been temporarily abandoned owing to the fact that all deputies and inspectors have been thrown into the fight against the foot-and-mouth disease. Oscar L. Hemphill, Deputy Horticultural Commissioner, in charge of the rodent control work, reports excellent progress, the last month's activities including a survey of 85,430 acres, of which 48,737 acres were found clean. The county treated 1506 acres, while the landowners treated about 12,490 acres with excellent results, according to Mr. Hemphill. This is the seventh year the squirrel eradication has been carried on in Tulare county, which is recognized as one of the cleanest counties in California.

WHITEWASHES FOR FARM USES—HOW TO MAKE AND APPLY THEM

By E. J. STIRNIMAN, Division of Agricultural Engineering, University of California

COLD water paints frequently are used on minor farm buildings and fences to protect them from weather and to improve their appearance. They serve the purpose very well when properly prepared and applied, but are not as durable as good oil paints. Cold water paint, properly mixed and applied in dry weather, should last two years. If an oil-painted building is to be repainted with a substitute, the old paint should all be removed. This is accomplished by the use of a paint remover or blow torch, the loosened paint being removed with a scraper or steel brush. The expense involved in removing old paint would not be warranted in case of large or valuable buildings, which in all probability would require but a single coat of oil paint to put them in good shape.

A group of farm buildings always looks best when they are painted alike, that is with the same colors. If a cold-water paint is used on a minor structure, it should be tinted to match the oil paint with which the more important buildings have been treated.

Whitewash is probably the cheapest of all paints and for certain purposes is very satisfactory. Lime is the basis of white wash, which, because of its low price, ease of application and antiseptic properties, is used for coating interior walls as well as the outside of stables and other farm buildings.

An ordinary whitewash is made by slaking quick lime in water. The lime should be placed in a tight receptacle such as a barrel, tub or pail and water poured over it. It should then be covered and allowed to stand for about one hour. If insufficient water is used, the lime will not be completely hydrated and may become scorched. If too much water is added, the slaking action will be retarded by lowering the temperature. Scorched lime is generally lumpy so it is important that the right amount of water be added to get the best results so that the proper consistency may be obtained for its application.

The United States Department of Agriculture gives the following formulas for mixing whitewashes for different uses:

(FACTORY WHITEWASH)

(Interior—for walls, ceilings, posts, etc.)

(1) 62 lbs. (1 bushel) quicklime; slake with 15 gallons water; keep barrel covered until steam ceases to rise; stir occasionally to prevent scorching.

(2) 2½ lbs. rye flour; beat in one-half gallon of cold water; add two gallons of boiling water.

(3) 2½ lbs. common rock salt; dissolve in two and one-half gallons of hot water.

Mix (2) and (3), then pour into (1) and stir until all is well mixed.

WEATHERPROOF WHITEWASH

(Exterior—for buildings, fences, etc.)

(1) 62 lbs. (1 bushel) quicklime; slake with 12 gallons of hot water.

(2) 2 lbs. common table salt; one pound sulphate of zinc; dissolve in two gallons of boiling water.

(3) Two gallons skimmed milk.

Pour (2) into (1), then add the milk (3) and mix thoroughly.

LIGHTHOUSE WHITEWASH

(1) 62 lbs. (1 bushel) quicklime, slake with 12 gallons of hot water.

(2) 12 lbs. rock salt; dissolve in six gallons of boiling water.

(3) Six pounds Portland Cement.

Pour (2) into (1), then add the (3).

CEMENT WHITEWASH

The following recipe for cement whitewash has been successfully used in cold storage warehouses. It adheres strongly to cement, brick or wood and does not rub off.

Slake one-half bushel of lime with boiling water, adding the water slowly and stirring constantly until a thin paste results. The lime will be lumpy if the water is added too freely and if the mass is not properly stirred. Add one-half peck of salt to the lime paste; stir thoroughly; add water to bring the whitewash to the proper consistency. Add a good handful of Portland cement and a tablespoonful of ultra marine blue to each pail of whitewash. The cement and the blue powder should be added just before the wash is to be used and should be stirred thoroughly, otherwise the whitewash will be streaked. The cement makes the whitewash adhere strongly to any surface and the bluing counteracts the grayish color of the cement, the result being a white coating.

FOR SPECIAL PURPOSES

Alum added to a lime whitewash increases its adhesive quality. An ounce to the gallon is sufficient. Flour paste answers the same purpose, but a preservative such as zinc sulphate should be added. Molasses renders the lime more soluble and causes it to more deeply penetrate the wood or plaster; a pint of molasses to 5 gallons of whitewash is sufficient. Silicate of soda solution (about 35 deg. Baume) in the proportion of 1 to 10 of whitewash produces a fire-resistive cement. A pound of cheap bar soap dissolved in a gallon of boiling water and added to about 5 gallons of thick whitewash will impart a gloss like that of oil paint. The introduction of a small quantity of crude carbolic acid adds to the whitewash a certain value as a disinfectant.

many of these commercial feeds are the last word in scientifically prepared poultry rations, and as such are a boon to the poultryman, and to say the least, a great saver of time. For the poultryman who buys poultry feeds in large quantities, in ton lots, so to speak, thereby getting the benefit of a low market quotation, the mixing at home of these feeds is a practical plan. The poultryman, of course, must be convinced that the formula he follows is a really efficient and profitable one. On the other hand, the man who owns a small flock naturally buys his feed in somewhat limited quantities, generally getting but a few sacks at a time. In such a case it would be necessary to buy some of the ingredients in a home-mixed mash or scratch in less than one-sack lots, as otherwise the poultryman would have an array of partly used sacks of feed on hand occupying valuable space, and the market value of this material might drop in price before it could be used. Buying in less than sack lots is not an efficient practice. The average poultryman is becoming more and more dependent upon the commercially-mixed feeds to supply the necessary rations for the flock. Two reasons seem to account for this rather dependent attitude on the part of the poultrymen. One of these has been mentioned, namely the time saving element, while the other is the fact that most big manufacturers of prepared poultry feeds have made a deep study of the situation, have expended large amounts of capital in their attempts to place well-balanced feeds before the poultrymen, and have, because of their intensive study, chemical analyses, and excellent facilities evolved products which in many cases are more efficient than many home-mixed rations. Strong competition among the manufacturers has resulted in the placing of these prepared feeds before the buying public at a price the poultryman can afford to pay and still be able to make a profit on good stock. If these feeds cease to perform their function, namely the putting on of body growth and increasing egg production, the poultryman has the alternative of preparing his own feeds by following his own formulas. The whole proposition resolves itself into the question of whether the poultryman is satisfied with the commercially prepared feeds, with reference to their price and efficiency. Many successful formulas have been established by our experiment stations and at egg laying contests, and the poultryman can put these into use in his own flock if he so desires. If the results from commercially prepared feeds are bringing the desired results, however, much work and worry involved in the home mixing process are naturally eliminated.

A uniform method of cutting meats for the wholesale and retail trade is advocated by the United States Department of Agriculture. Differences in methods of cutting as now practiced in the various markets frequently lead to waste, and tend to produce gluts of certain cuts in markets where there is not a constant local demand, the department says. Fresh beef, veal, lamb and mutton are shipped from slaughtering points to consuming centers in full carcasses, sides or quarters and are then divided into wholesale and retail cuts. Variations in methods of cutting have resulted from local customs and consumers' demands peculiar to the different markets. These variations at times make comparisons between prices of cuts at different markets practically impossible and render the exchange of wholesale cuts between markets extremely difficult. The department advocates the "Chicago" method of cutting as the one offering the most acceptable basis on which wholesale cuts of meat may be standardized. The method is simple and can easily be understood and practiced by anyone handling fresh meats, it is pointed out. Details regarding this method as applied to beef, veal, pork, lamb and mutton have been published in Department of Agriculture Circular 300, Commercial Cuts of Meat.

Many prominent Ayrshire breeders have adopted the practice of dehorning their cattle, which, from a practical standpoint, seems logical, and which is probably more profitable from a production point of view, as many good cows that develop vicious habits are rendered less harmful when their horns are removed. On the other hand, many prominent breeders rightly take the stand that from a show-ring standpoint the absence of the long uplifted horn, which is such a striking characteristic of the Ayshire breed, greatly detracts from the attractiveness of the animal. Followers of both sides of the argument are entitled to consideration, but the controversy will perhaps not be settled until some breeder develops a herd that is naturally hornless. Other breeds have also had their troubles along this line, and not a few breeds are now naturally hornless. We know that horned cattle do much damage, this being especially true as to feeder cattle. When the hornless kind with equal quality and conformation come on the market, they generally command a premium, particularly if their horned competitors present scars and scratches caused by fighting and goring, which naturally means a bruised carcass. There is no question but that an animal with well-placed, symmetrical, and highly polished horns coming into the show ring, commands more admiration than one with a crumpled horn, or one that has been dehorned, other points being equal. However, the presence or absence of horns on an animal should not affect the actual value of the animal except for the danger to man or beast that more often accompanies the horned animal.

Paul E. Kennedy, secretary-treasurer of the California Breeders of Rare and Fancy Fowl, reports that the membership in this new organization has now reached a total of 40, including some of the best known fanciers of the State. He says that the club is not only attracting wide attention throughout California, but that numerous letters have come to him recently requesting that it be made a national organization. This would indicate that a growing interest is being taken throughout the country in bringing about a revival of many breeds of fowl that formerly graced the show room, but which in recent years have not been much in the lime light.

Of the three egg-laying contests which are now annual events in California, the Pomona contest, now in its third year, includes forty-eight entries, mostly Leghorns, though five other breeds are represented. The Petaluma contest, now in its fourth year, has thirty-six entries, all Leghorns. The Santa Cruz contest, now in its fifth year, has fifty-two entries in the light division, mostly Leghorns, but with a few Anconas, the heavy division having twelve entries, mostly Rhode Island Reds and Barred Rocks. Santa Cruz also has a two-year contest with nineteen entries of Leghorns.

KEEP FARM HORSES IN GOOD CONDITION

By C. E. HOWELL, Assistant Professor of Animal Husbandry, College of Agriculture.

Horses and mules have maintained a steadier growth in California than almost all other classes of live stock, mules particularly having registered a steady increase from year to year. These statements are backed up by the yearly reports of the United States Department of Agriculture. There are those who would create a belief in the minds of the general public that horses are decreasing in numbers very rapidly. At the present time in California there is one horse or mule to every seven persons.

On the average farm in the United States and under average conditions, a tractor will replace about four horses. Even on farms where tractors are used, it has been found that horses still do about 80 per cent of the work to be done on the farm. So far as farm use is concerned, therefore, trucks and tractors have affected horse use but little. Profits in any business are determined quite largely on operating expenses and horses long ago proved their worth from the standpoint of economy.

In order to use horses successfully and to get the most efficient results from their work, they should be in the best possible condition. Condition means thorough bodily and muscular fitness for the work required. The horse that has been wintered on a scant food supply is not in proper condition to start off in the spring work with a rush. The horse in poor condition loses vitality and resisting powers through hard work and insufficient food. A fat horse or a horse not used to work may have great vitality, but it quickly leaves him and he has practically no resisting powers.

The only way to get animals into condition is by the combination of sufficient good food and sufficient healthful exercise continued over a long period. Working tired animals when they are unfit is a fruitful cause of accident and disease. The first work in the spring should be light and, if possible, the conditioning process should be spread over a considerable time. The bulk of the work in conditioning a horse should be done at a reasonably slow pace.

Thirst and sweating are prominent features of the early stages of conditioning and are to some extent dependent on each other. In breaking a young horse to work or starting horses in to the early spring work, they should be given a liberal amount of water. The quantity and quality of the sweat are very generally and correctly taken as an index of condition. To overwork a horse in early spring tends to reduce his flesh, to irritate his temper, and to render him less fit for service during the working season. When good, hard muscular development has been attained, any work within season will not only be performed without great effort, but will continue to add to the quality of the condition already acquired. This means that a good amount of work may be demanded from a well-seasoned horse, that it actually does him good, and that while performing it he will run less and less risk of accident and disease.

The farmer who orders his nursery-stock early is right in the class with the early bird that gets the choice worms.

CALIFORNIA WEATHER AND CROP SUMMARY

Little cause for optimism is to be found in the weather and crop reports for the first two weeks of May, as droughty conditions were then still prevalent in nearly all parts of California. Pastures declined and grain crops suffered very seriously from the lack of moisture. Weather conditions for the development of fruit were favorable, however, but all available irrigation water was brought to use, as a limited late summer supply is predicted, especially in sections dependent upon gravity flow. Snow disappeared rapidly from the mountains and all streams are below normal.

In his report issued May 16, E. E. Kaufman, agricultural statistician, California Co-operative Crop Reporting Service, summarizing May conditions to that time as follows:

"Temperatures during the first week were generally above normal, while during the second week they were more nearly seasonal. Many localities report two or three days of unseasonably warm weather accompanied by drying winds that absorbed much of the small amount of moisture present in the surface soil. Along the coast there was considerable foggy weather. Scattered showers occurred on May 12 in the Sacramento Valley and northern part of the San Joaquin Valley, but these were generally too light to be of any appreciable value to growing crops. In Sonoma, Mendocino and Napa counties the rainfall was a little heavier and of some benefit, especially to pasture and grain.

"In Southern California the ranges are in a fair condition due to rainfall being heavier there than elsewhere since the latter part of March. Pasture on the valley and foothill ranges north of the Tehachapi is poor and even on some of the higher ranges grass is already showing the effects of the persistent dry weather. Much wheat and barley, particularly the late sown, have been abandoned for grain and is being cut for hay or pastured where it is too poor for hay. Live stock is faring very well considering the poor condition of pasture the past winter and spring. Many cattle and sheep men, in those districts where quarantine regulations do not prevent the movement of live stock, are now moving or preparing to move their herds to mountain ranges, which are earlier than usual.

"There has been no rain of any consequence in the Sacramento Valley for more than a month and a drying northerly wind materially reduced grain prospects compared with early season indications. Small grains are mostly in a poor condition except on the lowlands, where the soil is more retentive of moisture. It is expected that fairly good yields will be harvested from these more favored localities. Practically all grain plantings under rainfall conditions in the San Joaquin Valley will not produce grain except in the northeastern part of the valley. All irrigated grain will produce very favorable yields. Conditions similar to those prevailing in the San Joaquin Valley exist in the central coastal counties where large areas of grain are generally grown. Most grain fields in Southern California will mature a fair harvest, due to the effect of late March and early April rains that followed the very adverse conditions which prevailed earlier in the season."

Other reports for the first two weeks of May indicate that spring vegetable shipments declined and that summer crops had begun to ripen, notably Imperial Valley cantaloupes. Olives and grapes flowered, and vineyards were sulphured as a precaution against mildew. Oranges bloomed profusely and set fruit well, the weather being favorable for citrus fruits. Late walnuts bloomed and early varieties were found to have set good crops. The picking of cherries and berries continued and good supplies of both were found on the markets. Among field crops, alfalfa grew well and some second cuttings were taken. Planting of rice and sugar beets proceeded. In Imperial Valley cotton was benefited by warm weather.

INSUFFICIENT USE OF WATER CITED

Some very amazing figures have been compiled by W. B. DeNure, district manager, Department of Public Service at Van Nuys, in regard to the use of irrigation water in San Fernando Valley during the months of March and April. These figures tend to show that during a period of the year when the soils of that valley were actually dry, not more than one acre inch was used by the growers. Mr. De Nure's statement as follows:

"I have just completed a check on the use of irrigation water for apricots, peaches and walnuts during the months of March and April, the result of which is very illuminating to say the least. In the Van Nuys district, which comprises an acreage of 3233 acres on apricots, peaches, and other deciduous trees and 3027 acres in walnuts, there was a total use of water amounting to $3197.85 on 6270 acres, an average of 50 cents an acre, which represents exactly one-acre inch. There was 60 cents an acre used on apricots and peaches and 40 cents on walnuts. This was in the face of the fact that there was an unrestricted use of water during April.

These figures are food for thought for the deciduous-fruit growers of the San Fernando Valley, orchard experts say. They indicate, it is pointed out, one reason why so many growers in the valley have not secured satisfactory results in the growing of fruits. Irrigation water is a necessity, especially during the period of drouth, and attention is called to the fact that the district has passed through two years of half normal rainfall and that soils have been dry for the greater part of that time. During such a period is possible for trees to become so shocked and weakened that it will take some years for recovery, the orchard authorities say. They add that it would be well for the future prosperity of deciduous fruit growers if they would attempt to maintain healthy trees by supplying an adequate amount of irrigation water.

and the Horticultural Commissioner's office. All the walnut-producing sections of Los Angeles county have been accurately mapped during recent weeks with reference to codlin-moth infestation, and through the local walnut growers' associations, arrangements were completed for an extensive spraying and dusting campaign to be launched at the time when control measures should be recommended by the entomologist co-operating. It is expected that by a concerted effort, the pest will undoubtedly be kept under good control and will be prevented from increasing to the serious extent to which it exists in other walnut-producing countries of the world.

"JUNE BUDDING" AS A TIME-SAVING PLAN

By M. J. HEPPNER, Division of Pomology, University of California

"June budding" does not, as the term might imply, necessarily mean budding that is done during the month of June, although this is the conception most fruit growers have. Instead, it refers to budding done usually during the early summer, the bud growing the same season. In other words, the process of budding completed, growth commences soon after. It so happens in most sections of the State that budding is best done during the month of June. However, in other sections late May may be the best time and in still others, July. The time to do "June budding" will vary with the year and the condition of the stock.

Although success can be had when employing "June budding" on all deciduous fruit trees, best results are obtained with the peach. The writer has had success in "June budding" of apricots, apples, almonds and pears, the budding having been done in July.

The chief advantage of "June budding" lies in the fact that a fruit tree can be propagated from seed to readiness for orchard planting in one year's time, while if a bud was inserted in late summer, according to the usual practice, a second season would be necessary for it to grow into a tree. The root of a "June-budded" tree is only one year old, while the root of a fall-budded tree is two years old at the time of planting in the orchard. The advantage of the one-year root is that it is smaller and that more of it therefore remains intact when removed from the nursery takes place.

There are three requisites for "June budding:"

1. The seedlings must be large enough early in the season to be budded conveniently.
2. The bark must slip readily.
3. The desired dormant buds must be available. Sometimes they are not mature enough to use in May or early June.

The budding operation does not differ from any other budding. The securing of bud wood is often difficult owing to the earliness of the growing season. However, it has been found that buds can be made to mature earlier by "ringing" the branches.

About ten days after the bud has been inserted, the string holding it in place should be cut so as not to cut the rapidly-growing tree. Immediately after cutting, the seedling should be bent over and broken about four inches above the bud. Care should be taken not to completely sever this top portion, but to allow a few strands of wood to remain intact. Complete removal of this portion of the tree at this time will cause the bud to be "drowned out" owing to too much sap going to the bud. As soon as the bud has started to grow vigorously, the top should be cut off about one-half inch above the growing bud. Given the proper conditions, the young tree should be large enough to plant in the orchard the following winter.

CONTROL WORK HALTED

VISALIA—Rodent control work in Tulare county has been temporarily abandoned owing to the fact that all deputies and inspectors have been thrown into the fight against the foot-and-mouth disease. Oscar L. Hemphill, Deputy Horticultural Commissioner, in charge of the rodent control work, reports excellent progress, the last month's activities including a survey of 85,430 acres, of which 48,737 acres were found clean. The county treated 1506 acres, while the landowners treated about 12,490 acres with excellent results, according to Mr. Hemphill. This is the seventh year the squirrel eradication has been carried on in Tulare county, which is recognized as one of the cleanest counties in California.

WHITEWASHES FOR FARM USES—HOW TO MAKE AND APPLY THEM

By E. J. STIRNIMAN, Division of Agricultural Engineering, University of California

COLD water paints frequently are used on minor farm buildings and fences to protect them from weather and to improve their appearance. They serve the purpose very well when properly prepared and applied, but are not as durable as good oil paints. Cold water paint, properly mixed and applied in dry weather, should last two years. If an oil-painted building is to be repainted with a substitute, the old paint should all be removed. This is accomplished by the use of a paint remover or blow torch, the loosened paint being removed with a scraper or steel brush. The expense involved in removing old paint would not be warranted in case of large or valuable buildings, which in all probability would require but a single coat of oil paint to put them in good shape.

A group of farm buildings always looks best when they are painted alike, that is with the same colors. If a cold-water paint is used on a minor structure, it should be tinted to match the oil paint with which the more important buildings have been treated.

Whitewash is probably the cheapest of all paints and for certain purposes is very satisfactory. Lime is the basis of white wash, which, because of its low price, ease of application and antiseptic properties, is used for coating interior walls as well as the outside of stables and other farm buildings.

An ordinary whitewash is made by slaking quick lime in water. The lime should be placed in a tight receptacle such as a barrel, tub or pail and water poured over it. It should then be covered and allowed to stand for about one hour. If insufficient water is used, the lime will not be completely hydrated and may become scorched. If too much water is added, the slaking action will be retarded by lowering the temperature. Scorched lime is generally lumpy so it is important that the right amount of water be added to get the best results so that the proper consistency may be obtained for its application.

The United States Department of Agriculture gives the following formulas for mixing whitewashes for different uses:

(FACTORY WHITEWASH)

(Interior—for walls, ceilings, posts, etc.)

(1) 62 lbs. (1 bushel) quicklime; slake with 15 gallons water; keep barrel covered until steam ceases to rise; stir occasionally to prevent scorching.

(2) 2½ lbs. rye flour; beat in one-half gallon of cold water; add two gallons of boiling water.

(3) 2½ lbs. common rock salt; dissolve in two and one-half gallons of hot water.

Mix (2) and (3), then pour into (1) and stir until all is well mixed.

WEATHERPROOF WHITEWASH

(Exterior—for buildings, fences, etc.)

(1) 62 lbs. (1 bushel) quicklime; slake with 12 gallons of hot water.

(2) 2 lbs. common table salt; one pound sulphate of zinc; dissolve in two gallons of boiling water.

(3) Two gallons skimmed milk.

Pour (2) into (1), then add the milk (3) and mix thoroughly.

LIGHTHOUSE WHITEWASH

(1) 62 lbs. (1 bushel) quicklime, slake with 12 gallons of hot water.

(2) 12 lbs. rock salt; dissolve in six gallons of boiling water.

(3) Six pounds Portland Cement.

Pour (2) into (1), then add the (3).

CEMENT WHITEWASH

The following recipe for cement whitewash has been successfully used in cold storage warehouses. It adheres strongly to cement, brick or wood and does not rub off.

Slake one-half bushel of lime with boiling water, adding the water slowly and stirring constantly until a thin paste results. The lime will be lumpy if the water is added too freely and if the mass is not properly stirred. Add one-half peck of salt to the lime paste; stir thoroughly; add water to bring the whitewash to the proper consistency. Add a good handful of Portland cement and a tablespoonful of ultra marine blue to each pail of whitewash. The cement and the blue powder should be added just before the wash is to be used and should be stirred thoroughly, otherwise the whitewash will be streaked. The cement makes the whitewash adhere strongly to any surface and the bluing counteracts the grayish color of the cement, the result being a white coating.

FOR SPECIAL PURPOSES

Alum added to a lime whitewash increases its adhesive quality. An ounce to the gallon is sufficient. Flour paste answers the same purpose, but a preservative such as zinc sulphate should be added. Molasses renders the lime more soluble and causes it to more deeply penetrate the wood or plaster; a pint of molasses to 5 gallons of whitewash is sufficient. Silicate of soda solution (about 35 deg. Baume) in the proportion of 1 to 10 of whitewash produces a fire-resistive cement. A pound of cheap bar soap dissolved in a gallon of boiling water and added to about 5 gallons of thick whitewash will impart a gloss like that of oil paint. The introduction of a small quantity of crude carbolic acid adds to the whitewash a certain value as a disinfectant.

many of these commercial feeds are the last word in scientifically prepared poultry rations, and as such are a boon to the poultryman, and to say the least, a great saver of time. For the poultryman who buys poultry feeds in large quantities, in ton lots, so to speak, thereby getting the benefit of a low market quotation, the mixing at home of these feeds is a practical plan. The poultryman, of course, must be convinced that the formula he follows is a really efficient and profitable one. On the other hand, the man who owns a small flock naturally buys his feed in somewhat limited quantities, generally getting but a few sacks at a time. In such a case it would be necessary to buy some of the ingredients in a home-mixed mash or scratch in less than one-sack lots, as otherwise the poultryman would have an array of partly used sacks of feed on hand occupying valuable space, and the market value of this material might drop in price before it could be used. Buying in less than sack lots is not an efficient practice. The average poultryman is becoming more and more dependent upon the commercially-mixed feeds to supply the necessary rations for the flock. Two reasons seem to account for this rather dependent attitude on the part of the poultrymen. One of these has been mentioned, namely the time saving element, while the other is the fact that most big manufacturers of prepared poultry feeds have made a deep study of the situation, have expended large amounts of capital in their attempts to place well-balanced feeds before the poultrymen, and have, because of their intensive study, chemical analyses, and excellent facilities evolved products which in many cases are more efficient than many home-mixed rations. Strong competition among the manufacturers has resulted in the placing of these prepared feeds before the buying public at a price the poultryman can afford to pay and still be able to make a profit on good stock. If these feeds cease to perform their function, namely the putting on of body growth and increasing egg production, the poultryman has the alternative of preparing his own feeds by following his own formulas. The whole proposition resolves itself into the question of whether the poultryman is satisfied with the commercially prepared feeds, with reference to their price and efficiency. Many successful formulas have been established by our experiment stations and at egg laying contests, and the poultryman can put these into use in his own flock if he so desires. If the results from commercially prepared feeds are bringing the desired results, however, much work and worry involved in the home mixing process are naturally eliminated.

A uniform method of cutting meats for the wholesale and retail trade is advocated by the United States Department of Agriculture. Differences in methods of cutting as now practiced in the various markets frequently lead to waste, and tend to produce gluts of certain cuts in markets where there is not a constant local demand, the department says. Fresh beef, veal, lamb and mutton are shipped from slaughtering points to consuming centers in full carcasses, sides or quarters and are then divided into wholesale and retail cuts. Variations in methods of cutting have resulted from local customs and consumers' demands peculiar to the different markets. These variations at times make comparisons between prices of cuts at different markets practically impossible and render the exchange of wholesale cuts between markets extremely difficult. The department advocates the "Chicago" method of cutting as the one offering the most acceptable basis on which wholesale cuts of meat may be standardized. The method is simple and can easily be understood and practiced by anyone handling fresh meats, it is pointed out. Details regarding this method as applied to beef, veal, pork, lamb and mutton have been published in Department of Agriculture Circular 300, Commercial Cuts of Meat.

Many prominent Ayrshire breeders have adopted the practice of dehorning their cattle, which, from a practical standpoint, seems logical, and which is probably more profitable from a production point of view, as many good cows that develop vicious habits are rendered less harmful when their horns are removed. On the other hand, many prominent breeders rightly take the stand that from a show-ring standpoint the absence of the long uplifted horn, which is such a striking characteristic of the Ayshire breed, greatly detracts from the attractiveness of the animal. Followers of both sides of the argument are entitled to consideration, but the controversy will perhaps not be settled until some breeder develops a herd that is naturally hornless. Other breeds have also had their troubles along this line, and not a few breeds are now naturally hornless. We know that horned cattle do much damage, this being especially true as to feeder cattle. When the hornless kind with equal quality and conformation come on the market, they generally command a premium, particularly if their horned competitors present scars and scratches caused by fighting and goring, which naturally means a bruised carcass. There is no question but that an animal with well-placed, symmetrical, and highly polished horns coming into the show ring, commands more admiration than one with a crumpled horn, or one that has been dehorned, other points being equal. However, the presence or absence of horns on an animal should not affect the actual value of the animal except for the danger to man or beast that more often accompanies the horned animal.

Paul E. Kennedy, secretary-treasurer of the California Breeders of Rare and Fancy Fowl, reports that the membership in this new organization has now reached a total of 40, including some of the best known fanciers of the State. He says that the club is not only attracting wide attention throughout California, but that numerous letters have come to him recently requesting that it be made a national organization. This would indicate that a growing interest is being taken throughout the country in bringing about a revival of many breeds of fowl that formerly graced the show room, but which in recent years have not been much in the lime light.

Of the three egg-laying contests which are now annual events in California, the Pomona contest, now in its third year, includes forty-eight entries, mostly Leghorns, though five other breeds are represented. The Petaluma contest, now in its fourth year, has thirty-six entries, all Leghorns. The Santa Cruz contest, now in its fifth year, has fifty-two entries in the light division, mostly Leghorns, but with a few Anconas, the heavy division having twelve entries, mostly Rhode Island Reds and Barred Rocks. Santa Cruz also has a two-year contest with nineteen entries of Leghorns.

KEEP FARM HORSES IN GOOD CONDITION

By C. E. HOWELL, Assistant Professor of Animal Husbandry, College of Agriculture.

Horses and mules have maintained a steadier growth in California than almost all other classes of live stock, mules particularly having registered a steady increase from year to year. These statements are backed up by the yearly reports of the United States Department of Agriculture. There are those who would create a belief in the minds of the general public that horses are decreasing in numbers very rapidly. At the present time in California there is one horse or mule to every seven persons.

On the average farm in the United States and under average conditions, a tractor will replace about four horses. Even on farms where tractors are used, it has been found that horses still do about 80 per cent of the work to be done on the farm. So far as farm use is concerned, therefore, trucks and tractors have affected horse use but little. Profits in any business are determined quite largely on operating expenses and horses long ago proved their worth from the standpoint of economy.

In order to use horses successfully and to get the most efficient results from their work, they should be in the best possible condition. Condition means thorough bodily and muscular fitness for the work required. The horse that has been wintered on a scant food supply is not in proper condition to start off in the spring work with a rush. The horse in poor condition loses vitality and resisting powers through hard work and insufficient food. A fat horse or a horse not used to work may have great vitality, but it quickly leaves him and he has practically no resisting powers.

The only way to get animals into condition is by the combination of sufficient good food and sufficient healthful exercise continued over a long period. Working tired animals when they are unfit is a fruitful cause of accident and disease. The first work in the spring should be light and, if possible, the conditioning process should be spread over a considerable time. The bulk of the work in conditioning a horse should be done at a reasonably slow pace.

Thirst and sweating are prominent features of the early stages of conditioning and are to some extent dependent on each other. In breaking a young horse to work or starting horses in to the early spring work, they should be given a liberal amount of water. The quantity and quality of the sweat are very generally and correctly taken as an index of condition. To overwork a horse in early spring tends to reduce his flesh, to irritate his temper, and to render him less fit for service during the working season. When good, hard muscular development has been attained, any work within season will not only be performed without great effort, but will continue to add to the quality of the condition already acquired. This means that a good amount of work may be demanded from a well-seasoned horse, that it actually does him good, and that while performing it he will run less and less risk of accident and disease.

The farmer who orders his nursery stock early is right in the class with the early bird that gets the choice worms.

WEATHER FAVORABLE FOR NUTS AND BEANS

SANTA BARBARA.—Weather conditions so far this year have been particularly advantageous for both walnut and bean crops, and, say the growers, just the kind of weather needed after a dry winter, is being received, to "nurse" the crops through the first months of the growing season. There have been plenty of drenching fogs and few hot days, a condition helping to help maintain the moisture level well to the surface of fields cared for properly, and evaporation has been at a minimum. As a result, walnut groves are looking fine and the bean fields, which have now begun to sprout, are in good shape.

Estimating of the bean and walnut crop is said to be out of the question at this time, as in a large measure the size of the walnuts and the productivity of the bean fields depends upon whether the foggy weather continues or hot days come to drink up what little moisture is available. Even with groves and fields where irrigation is possible, it is said, estimates made today may be all wrong two months from now.

Walnut men state that there is an irregularity in the setting crop not known heretofore. Not only does this appear in the same orchard, but on the same trees some nuts are almost full size while others are still in the catkin stage. Where walnut groves are being heavily irrigated the walnuts are larger than ever before at this time, and are in groups of three, there being few nuts alone or even in twos.

The bean men state there will be a greater crop than at first was anticipated. In fact the acreage has been recently doubled. The seed has been sprouting vigorously and all the fields are showing a vigorous growth. The limas are looking particularly well, it is reported.

LEMON INDUSTRY IS COMING TO FRONT

UPLAND.—Shipping lemons from 700 acres at the present time, the lemon department of the Mountain View Fruit Association of Upland is coming to the front rapidly. There was a time when the lemon end of the business was not as important as the orange side, but conditions have changed with the development of the Mountain avenue district.

Major J. F. Hamilton, manager of the association, and its directors and members are well pleased with the results being obtained. Some 80 cars of lemons are stored in the house, with two cars coming in and two going forward each day. As the friut price increases, the size of the shipments will be increased.

A sorting and packing belt is a new mechanical feature that the association has recently adopted. The number of sorters required to handle the great amount of fruit passing through the association's house is greatly reduced by the new belt. An excellent ventilation system to keep the fruit in good condition is another feature of the association's equipment.

The man who neglects his farm for his car stands an awfully good chance to lose both.

SOME CONCLUSIONS ON FRUIT TROUBLES

By V. F. BLANCHARD, Assistant Farm Adviser, Los Angeles County

Further study of the delayed blooming of deciduous fruit trees has indicated that the first deductions made, in reference to the causes being tied up with climatic influences, were correct. However, an examination into the temperature and humidity records, as well as the wind action during the fall and winter months, has disclosed the fact that low humidity, combined with high temperatures and perhaps influenced by severe winds, together with extremely cold weather in the spring, was largely responsible for this condition.

A Power Farmer.

Breaking up stubble preparatory to planting corn on a San Jacinto Valley ranch.

At an informal conference of representatives of the college of agriculture of the University of California, including members of the Agricultural Extension Service staff of the United States Department of Agriculture and of the agricultural staff of the Chaffey Junior College of Agriculture, at Ontario the third week in May, discussion of the causes of the delayed foliation and blooming of deciduous fruit trees further substantiated these conclusions. The following statement was drafted by the conference, to be given to the fruit growers:

"It is the opinion of the conference that the causes of delayed foliation are primarily the unseasonable high temperatures and bright sunlight, accompanied by very low humidity occurring in February. Contributing factors were apparently the frequent, severe dry winds occurring through the fall and winter months, the low rainfall, and a warm February, followed by a colder March. Different fruits show marked variation in amount of injury. Peaches show greatest injury.

"Subsequent behavior of trees showing the present abnormal dormancy will undoubtedly depend to a large degree upon their previous condition and treatment. Temperatures of the next two weeks will also be an important determining factor.

"We believe that there is danger of further injury from sunburn and that trees still remaining largely leafless and exposed should be sprayed immediately with whitewash as a preventive treatment. We recommend a whitewash made up of 75 pounds of hydrated line to 200 gallons of water, lime to be added slowly as the water is put into the tank, with the agitator going.

"We would also recommend careful attention to irrigation in order to maintain a thorough and uniform distribution of water in the soil.

"We believe that no pruning should be done at this time.

INCREASED CITRUS ACREAGE IN ARIZONA

PHOENIX (Ariz.)—Many local citrus growers believe that in the Salt River Valley, the growing of grapefruit is more dependable than orange culture. Grapefruit usually makes a sure crop, and is said to be less affected by frost and weather conditions and by the June drop, that so seriously bits the navel orange groves. Practically all of the new grapefruit acreage planted in Arizona is the Marsh Seedless variety, which finds very ready sale in California and against which no quarantine regulations are enforced. A late sale of forty acres of grapefruit, northeast of here to Mrs. James Simpson of Chicago, for $60,000 is reported. The price is believed

The Livestock Bulletin

By ROBERT T. LYANS.

A bulletin has been recently issued by the College of Agriculture, Berkeley, covering the cost of producing milk and butter fat at representative dairies of California. This publication is the result of findings obtained from study of 14,250 cows in 246 dairies situated in eleven dairying sections of the State. The research work covers a period of one year, from March 1, 1922, to March 1, 1923. A few of the items of cost which entered into the total for the production of milk and butter fat are as follows: manual labor, from 24.1 to 38.2 cents per hour; management, 8.4 to 39 per cent of the cost of manual labor; horse labor, 8 to 21.9 cents per hour; truck and automobile use, 4.8 to 12.5 cents per mile; pasture, $2.68 to $23.16 per cow a year; hay, $12.05 to $23.59 per ton; concentrates, $26.09 to $42.67; silage, $4.81 to $7.86; and green feed, $3.10 to $6.42 per ton. Labor and feed were found to be the most costly of all items entering into the situation, ranging from 73.5 per cent to 85.7 per cent of the gross cost of production of milk and butter fat. Of the total output of the dairies studied the amount sold from the dairies ranged from 83.1 per cent to 97 per cent of the total production, the remainder being retained at the dairy for feeding of calves and for the use of family or employees. A summary of the survey shows the cost of producing milk and butter fat on the 246 dairies in the eleven districts for the year to have been as follows:

Humboldt-Del Norte district, $2.73 per 100 pounds of whole milk or 61.2 cents a pound of butterfat; Marin-Sonoma district, 49.2 cents a pound of butterfat; Alameda-Contra Costa-Santa Clara district, $2.83 per 100 pounds of whole milk (24.4 cents a gallon;) Sacramento-Yolo district, $2.46 per 100 pounds of whole milk or 64.2 cents a pound of butterfat; San Joaquin-Stanislaus district, $2.63 per 100 pounds of whole milk or 60 cents a pound of butterfat; Fresno district, $2.34 per 100 pounds of whole milk or 60.2 cents a pound of butter; Kern district, $2.23 per 100 pounds of whole milk or 50.1 cents a pound of butterfat; Los Angeles-Orange district, $3.73 per 100 pounds of whole milk at the rate of 97 cents a pound of butterfat contained in whole milk; San Diego district, $3.67 per 100 pounds of whole milk or at the rate of 86 cents a pound of butterfat contained in whole milk; San Luis Obispo district, 53.6 cents a pound of butterfat; Monterey-San Benito-Santa Cruz district, $2.54 per 100 pounds of whole milk or 70 cents a pound of butterfat.

In reviewing the situation as set forth above, some allowance must necessarily be made for certain uneconomical and inefficient practices for which dairymen are responsible. Obviously, in determining a price that the consumer should be called upon to pay, it is necessary that dairying be placed upon a basis of efficiency so that labor is used to the best advantage, economy in feeding is practiced, and profitless cows are eliminated. In brief, proper handling of the dairy, intelligent management, and conservatism in making investments in cattle, buildings, and equipment must go hand in hand.

These tables show that in radically different dairying sections, different in average costs, average yields, methods of handling average receipts, and kinds of products, there are dairies producing at a loss. Such data emphasize the need for both community interest in the dairying business and for individual inquiry on the part of the dairymen as to what means can be taken on the dairy to help the situation.

Ways of increasing profits suggested by the study are greater economy in the use of labor and feed, elimination of calf feeding, more efficient use of manure, and more definite attempts to reduce mortality.

Queen Pontiac Charlotte one of the few remaining daughters of King of the Pontiacs, owned by the Santa Monica Dairy Company, of Venice, recently gave birth to a lusty male calf, sired by K. S. P. Jannek. This cow is now twelve years old and seems to be in the prime of life. She is of large size, and still vigorous and strong. This last calf has been sold to a dairyman in Idaho, but owing to the foot-and-mouth disease, cannot be delivered for some time. Another high record Holstein in the Venice herd, King Segis Pontiac Lily McKinley recently gave birth to a fine bull calf, sired by King Segis Pontiac Jannek. The owners of this famous cow are said to have had several requests for her calves, but none are for sale as the company expects to keep them all in the herd.

The following statement of the agricultural outlook of 1924, based upon current information and upon reports from 43,000 farmers, representing every agricultural county in the country, and prepared by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, United States Department of Agriculture, to provide a basis upon which producers may make readjustments to meet economic changes, indicates that farmers are undertaking a normal production program. So far as it pertains to the live-stock situation this reports states that the swine industry is going through a period of liquidation and discouragement with record runs of hogs to market still continuing. In the past such periods of heavy production and low prices have led to reduction in breeding, which has resulted in shortage. Indications are that hog producers have now passed the peak of production and may be moving into one of the recurrent periods of low production. The dairy industry, according to this report, has expanded to the point where gross domestic production in terms of whole milk, slightly exceeds the gross domestic consumption. Judging from the number of cows on farms, there will be a further increase in production this year, which, coupled with a steadily increasing foreign production, suggests the necessity for caution as to further expansion in dairy production. With indications of reduced numbers of lambs on feed and lower shipments to market, the prospects favor a continuation of a strong market for several months, with larger market supplies in mid-summer. The wool situation is distinctly favorable for producers and there is apparently opportunity at present for profitable increase in the number of sheep. Poultry production has expanded rapidly in recent years. Present indications point to still further expansion in 1924. Consumption has also increased to a high level, and it would appear that further profitable expansion depends upon a continuation of this increasing demand.

By assuming entire charge of the foot-and-mouth disease situation in California, the United States Department of Agriculture has so unified the forces engaged in fighting the malady that an optimistic attitude is now being taken by everyone concerned in or vitally interested in the possible huge economic loss that threatens the State because of the complications naturally arising from quarantine restrictions and embargoes. In taking full charge, the government will establish uniform quarantines and restrictions and to a very large degree prevent unnecessary delays, and keep open trade channels which have been seriously beset by many obstacles. Knowing that the State's agriculture will not be completely bottled up as was threatened some time ago, a plan for restocking farms on which live stock has been destroyed is now in order. For the information of stockmen throughout the country who are now contemplating introducing new herds on their farms the following plan outlined by the Federal and State officials to safeguard the live stock industry should be observed. The department is now permitting, subject to supervision, the introduction of healthy stock thirty days after premises have been cleaned and disinfected and when they are otherwise considered safe. The first animals to be introduced are known as test animals, and are generally calves or pigs. These are given sufficient freedom to allow access to all parts of the premises on which infection previously existed. These animals are inspected after two days and at various intervals for a period of thirty days. Absence of new infections during this time indicates sufficient safety to permit of restocking. All such premises are kept in quarantine for sixty days longer, however, making the entire period of supervision ninety days from the time the test animals are introduced.

Donnybrook Colantha De Kol, Holstein cow owned by the Bridgford Holstein Company, Patterson, has completed a 365 day record of 1058.6 pounds butter from 25,219.2 pounds milk. She is the third daughter of her sire, Sir Colantha Prilly, to finish with over 1000 pounds butter in this herd within the past year.

Recent figures which have been compiled show that thus far 82,137 head of livestock have been slaughtered in the State due to the foot-and-mouth epidemic. Of this number 42,807 were cattle, 19,194 hogs, 19,660 sheep, and 476 goats.

In answer to the question submitted by a reader, as to whether poultrymen should mix their own feeds, it may be said that no hard and fast rule on this practice would be accepted by poultrymen in general. Each must decide for himself just what his flock must be fed to get the best results. While many poultrymen are opposed to the feeding of commercially prepared feeds, mashes, etc, there is also a great army of poultrymen who hold to the theory that

PLANS FOR VALENCIA SHOW STILL ALIVE

ANAHEIM.—The Fourth Annual Valencia Orange Show will probably be held in Anaheim in the near future, possibly in July, as the result of action taken recently by the board of directors of the local Chamber of Commerce in conference with the orange show committee.

The show, which was scheduled for May 21, was postponed on account of the foot-and-mouth disease, but since the epidemic is gradually being brought under control, the directors have expressed the opinion that plans for the show should go forward.

An offer was received from the Retail Growers' Association to combine the orange show with their pure food exposition in Los Angeles, but this idea was opposed by the directors, who declared that the advertising which Anaheim receives from the show would be lost by this move.

ACTIVE WAR WILL BE WAGED ON ALL PESTS

SANTA BARBARA.—Pest control activities are getting underway in Santa Barbara county and the campaign against rodents is in full swing. Lack of rain during the winter season prevented an active drive with gas, but now distribution of poison among the rodent colonies is being carried out in a systematic manner by the county horticultural commission poison squad. The campaign against codling moth in Carpinteria Valley walnut orchards will begin at once, under the direction of Harold Cadwell, former Santa Barbara county horticultural inspector. An examination of hatching conditions is now being carried on throughout the valley. Goleta walnut growers are turning their attention to the aphis, and are carrying on a dusting campaign with a new machine designed by Prof. R. E. Smith of the State Department of Agriculture.

The Santa Barbara County Commissioner's office reports that the summer season will find the walnut groves in the eastern end of the county in splendid condition to carry what seems to be a bumper crop to maturity.

Perfection consists not in doing extraordinary things, but in doing ordinary things extraordinarily well.

Some Diseases of Potatoes Prevalent in the Southland

By F. H. ERNST, Agricultural Extension Service, Los Angeles County

Los Angeles county potato growers generally reported poor stands this season. Some have plowed and replanted their fields, others planted the "misses" to string beans, as is shown here.

A CAREFUL survey of the spring potato crop in Los Angeles county by the writer and Dr. M. Chapovalov, potato disease expert of the United States Department of Agriculture, reveals a very poor stand running in some cases as low as 10 per cent. Some growers have found it unprofitable to care for these plantings and are consequently plowing them up and planting beans and other crops. Others are replanting the "misses" to potatoes or beans. Poor stands seem to be associated in some districts with the use of home or local-grown seed as fields planted to certified seed show much better stands.

It is becoming increasingly difficult to secure good healthy seed potatoes. During the last few years potato diseases of the "virus" type, such as mosaic, curly dwarf, leaf roll and spindle sprout have increased rapidly all over the United States as well as in California. In securing good seed, the best guide which can be followed in determining quality is the condition of the plants in the field where the seed is grown. The prevention control, and elimination of diseases in seed fields is necessary if healthy seed potatoes are to se secured. "Certification" of fields for seed stock is a great aid in this direction.

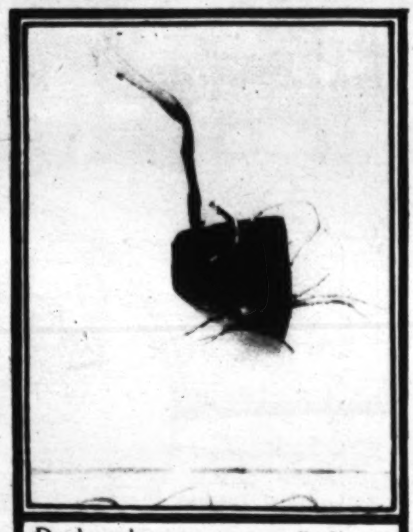
Early inspections of this year's potato fields show a large number with stands of about 50 per cent. "Misses" where the seed pieces have failed to grow usually show conditions indicating a constitutional weakness. Spindling sprout, characterized by slender feeble sprouts, is a common symptom. Net necrosis is usually associated with this disease and a cross section of the seed piece shows a network of dark-dead fibers in the tissues. Spindly sprouts may be produced, however, and yet no apparent defects be found in the seed piece. In this case, the disease can be detected only when the sprouts have appeared. Affected stock can never produce normal plants or a good yield.

Net necrosis differs in appearance from heat necrosis, typical cases showing darkened and dead fibers extending throughout the tuber tissue. In mild cases it may be confined to a small portion, usually the stem end of the potato. This disease appears to be a tuber system of leaf roll. Seed potatoes in fields where the stand is poor have shown a considerable amount of heat necrosis and investigations have shown that necrotic injury of all sorts is probably responsible for poor germination. Seed showing heat necrosis injury is marked by a discoloration of the water vessels in the tissues between the tuber surface and the ring of fibrovascular bundles. When the discoloration is very intense, a cross-section of an affected tuber shows the outer area as a darkened band. Control consists in keeping the soil moist and cool, and in digging the potatoes before the vines begin to die in order to prevent heating in the soil. This is especially true for light, sandy soils.

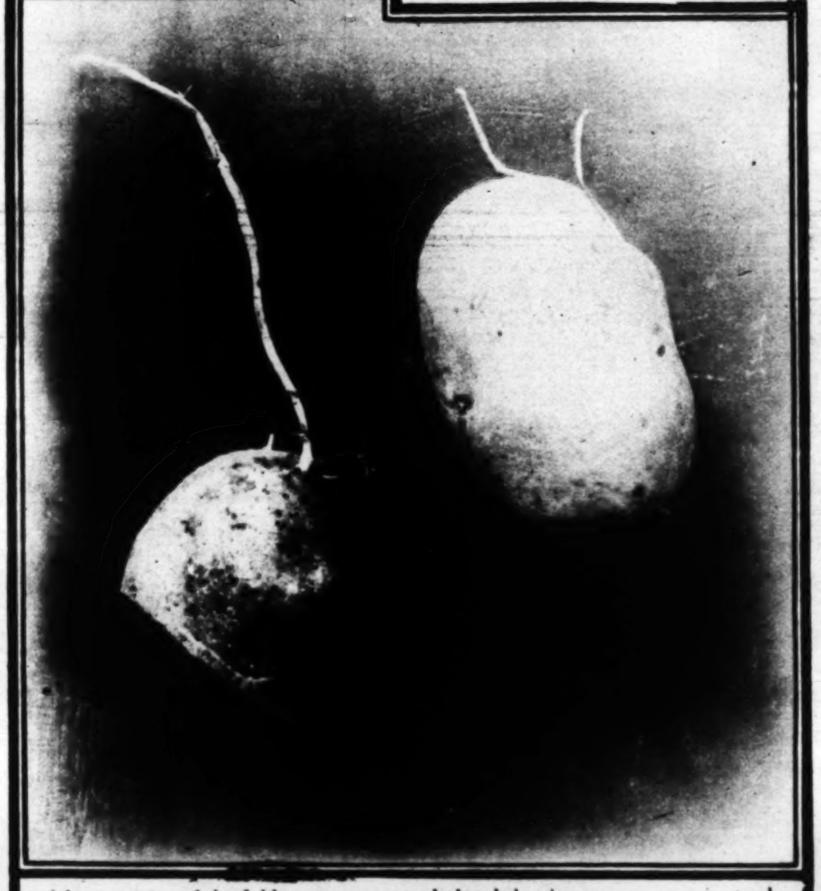
Other diseases making severe inroads into the 1924 potato crop include mosaic, leaf-roll and rhizoctonia. Occasionally blackleg is to be noticed. Comparatively little is known of mosaic and leaf-roll except that they have caused heavy losses. Mosaic, leaf-roll, net necrosis and spindle sprout are most commonly transmitted to the new crop by planting tubers from diseased plants. Experimental work has also shown that at least some, and probably all, may be carried by insects, especially the potato aphis. When an aphis feeds on an infected plant and then on a healthy one, the virus is transmitted to the latter. Diseased plants should therefore be rogued and destroyed as soon as they can be detected. Only healthy seed potatoes from healthy plants should be used and careful and frequent rogueing of the seed plot should be practiced. All plants showing symptoms of the virus diseases should be eliminated and destroyed.

Rhizoctonia manifests itself in a number of ways, frequently producing pea-sized potatoes close to the underground portion of the stem. The disease also attacks the young plants, forming cankers which are often fatal. Control consists in the use of clean seed and the treatment of the seed with corrosive sublimate before planting. The seed treatment, however, cannot eliminate the infection from the soil.

All of these diseases have been causing heavy losses to potato growers of the Southland. On preventing them, past experience has proved that the seed potato of itself is not a guarantee of clean healthy seed. It is necessary, if seed is purchased, to inspect the plants from which the seed potatoes are to come if one is to be certain of their freedom from disease. Then, too, every potato planter who grows his own seed should select a portion of his field for a seed plot. This portion should be rogued early, frequently and thoroughly in order to eliminate all diseased plants. It seems possible to maintain the productiveness and vigor of seed potatoes for a number of years without importing them from other sections if this is done.



Dead cankerous areas on stalk due to rhizoctonia. This is another cause of poor stands.

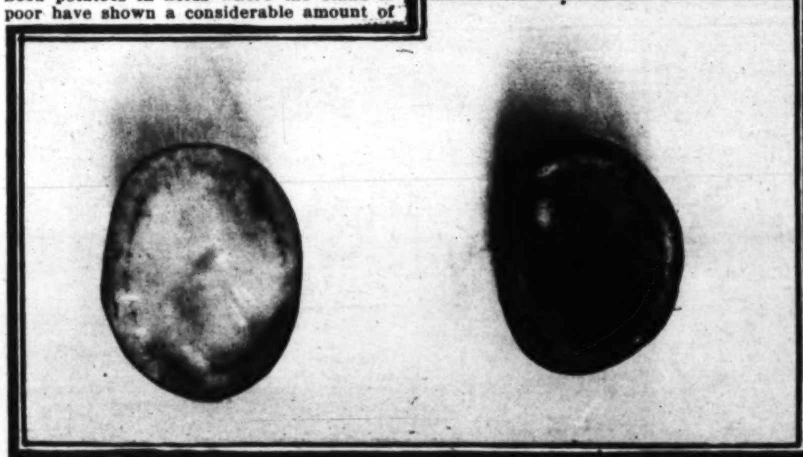


After a survey of the fields, potato experts declared that in many cases poor stands resulted from diseased seed. Here is a typical case of spindly sprout, often caused by necrotic injury.

Ten strains of White Rose were tested in Los Angeles county during 1923, and an interesting correlation was found to occur between the yield and the per cent of disease present. The lowest yield of 4200 pounds to the acre was secured from a strain having 66 per cent mosaic. The two best varieties, each producing 22,200 pounds per acre, averaged 12 per cent mosaic. Diseased plants usually produce few marketable potatoes.

GRAIN SORGHUM PLOT

Plans for grain sorghum club for the Antelope Valley Union High School boys have been announced by H. R. Benham, in charge of the Agricultural Department of that school. The size of plot to be planted will be one acre. In addition to the agricultural phases of the work, a variety test feature has been included. Double Dwarf Milo, Dwarf Milo, Heileman's strain, White Yolo, Blackhull Kaoliang, and Brown Kaoliang are the varieties which will be used to see which are best adapted to Antelope Valley conditions. The seed has been secured from the University of California Experiment Station and from the Yuma and Oklahoma Experiment Stations of the United States Department of Agriculture.

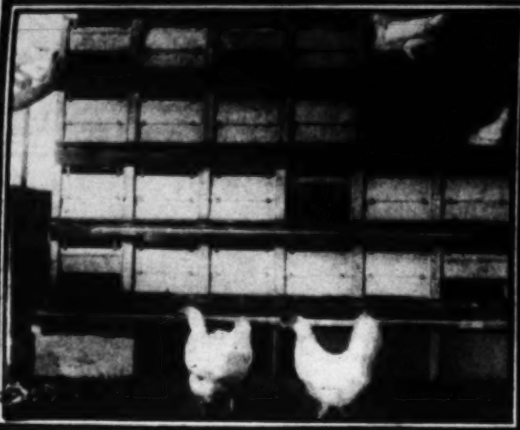


Necrotic injury, which results in poor germination. The seed piece on the right is affected with net necrosis and that on the right with heat necrosis. Both should be discarded, experts say.

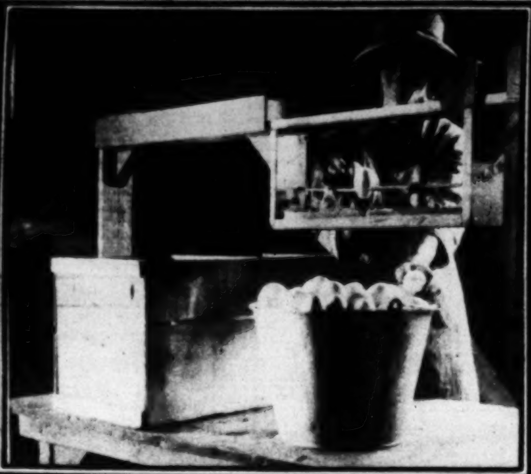
Healthy normal sprouts such as these are absolutely essential for successful potato production. Recent tests in Los Angeles county show that potatoes produce in proportion to disease infection, other factors being equal.

Poultryman Wins Success by Studying His Hens

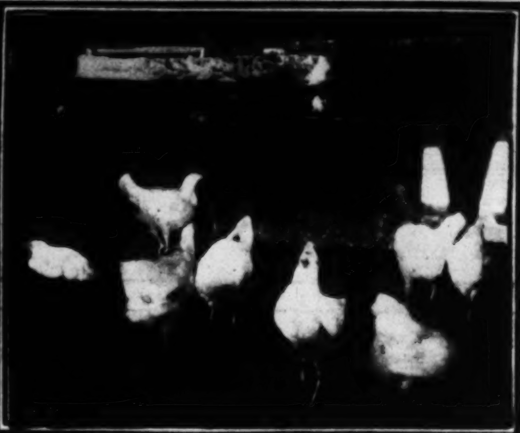
By ROBERT T. LYANS



A well-filled battery of trapnests on the Gainsley Leghorn Ranch.



In the egg-grading room—a necessity on a large poultry ranch.



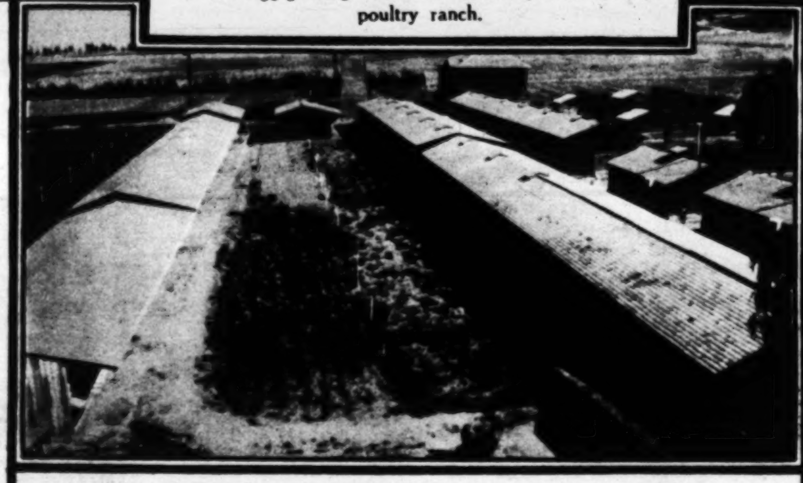
Greens are kept constantly before the hens in self-feeding wire baskets.

IN THESE days of close competition in every industry it is almost imperative that one going into any line of business have a well founded knowledge of its fundamentals if he expects to operate successfully. Exceptions, however, have been recorded where persons have made good without previous experience and with little or no capital. The writer knows quite a few successful poultrymen who started out with only an ambition and determination to succeed. Needless to say, practically all of these men met with problems, and are still meeting them, but their determination has so fired them that they have failed to recognize defeat and have ultimately seen their efforts crowned with success.

Gainsley's Leghorn Ranch, in Lomita, is one poultry establishement in Southern California that originated in this way. Nine years ago, Wright E. Gainsley and his mother, Mrs. L. W. Gainsley, laid the foundation of their present prosperous plant which lies between Lomita and Redondo Beach. Most of the methods now in use at this plant have, to use Mr. Gainsley's own words, been learned through hard work and study of the conditions and actions of the birds. In other words, strict observance of the needs and wants of the hens has been a strong factor in building the establishment.

As an example of some of the problems encountered, Mr. Gainsley says that the first laying house to be built on this ranch has been remodeled four times, each time with the idea of working out some new improvement in the housing system. At present there are three laying houses, each 14 by 120 feet in size, and another 14 by 120 feet on the place, all having shingle roofs of the "A" type. There are four brooder houses 14 by 24 feet in size, with a capacity of 3200 chicks. Heat is supplied them from stoves that burn engine distillate.

Not more than 800 to 900 chicks are ever placed in one house at a time as Mr. Gainsley holds to the rule that it does not pay to overcrowd the baby chicks. Other buildings on this ranch include a feed house 24 by 40 feet in size, with incubator cellar underneath and two floors above, one used for storing feed and straw, and the other as an egg grading room; a broiler house 16 by 32 feet equipped with heater so broilers can be separated from pullets at a very early age, and numerous colony houses 8 by 10 feet in size in which are housed young breeding cockerels. Mr. Gainsley has tried out large and small yards and houses without yards for his laying stock, but has found the latter method the best. The pullets are placed in the laying houses at six to seven months of age.



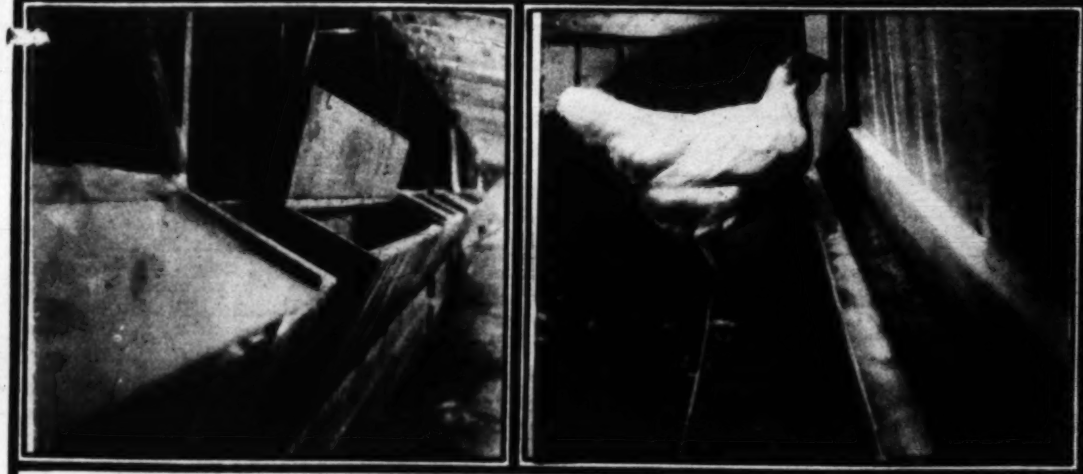
General view of the Gainsley plant.

Cockerels enjoying shade afforded by thriving patch of kale.

In the selection of breeding stock, Mr. Gainsley first culls by general comparison of all hens in the pens; then follows this practice by culling for vigor, uniformity to type and time of molt. If a hen cannot survive these tests, her trapnest record, even though it is rather high, is considered to be of little value. Regarding the value of the trapnest as a means of increasing egg production, the owners of this ranch agree that it takes a lot of time and work, but say that in their case it has been the means of raising the flock average from 135 eggs to over 160 eggs per year per hen. They report that their last year's flock average for 2400 hens was 163.8, with many hens laying more than 260 eggs each. In mating up their pens, all cockerels used must have records of not less than 175 eggs for the two nearest dams in order to secure a place in the breeding pens.

Mr. Gainsley says that the present season has been a good one for hatching eggs and for baby chicks and that his incubators have been running to capacity since the first of the year. The hatches have run from 67 per cent to 73 per cent, he says, while the eggs have run 95 per cent in fertility. This high percentage of fertility and hatchability he attributes to the tender, juicy greens which have been kept before the birds at all times. At the present time, 6000 chicks are being brooded to fill the laying pens next year, and to help supply the demand for pullets which now exists. In fact, Mr. Gainsley says, it is now being planned to enlarge the brooding equipment on the ranch next year to supply this growing demand for twelve-weeks-old pullets.

A constant supply of green feeds is considered by the owners of the Gainsley Leghorn Ranch to be one of the secrets of high egg production, and to supply this at all times they plant alfalfa, Swiss chard, Sudan grass, kale and barley in order that the supply may not become exhausted at any time during the year. The greens are fed in hoppers, a fresh supply being placed in each house every day. The laying houses are equipped with labor-saving devices, such as automatic mash hoppers and drinking fountains, which enables Mr. Gainsley, with the help of one other man, to properly care for his big flock. This poultryman believes that in order to make money in the poultry business one must be willing to jump into his overalls and work as much as 14 to 16 hours when necessity requires. The poultrymen who succeed must be in actual contact with the flock, he says, in order to know what they are really doing.



The mash hoppers are filled from outside the pens and automatically feed out to the hens on the inside of the laying houses, as shown in picture at right.
